THE PURPOSE OF "THE WATCHTOWER"

Every watchtower has its purpose. It serves as an elevated place for a wide-awake person with sharp vision. It enables him to see far ahead into the distance and tell those below for whom he is a watchman what is drawing near, whether it is a danger against which to prepare or it is something good over which to be glad with strong faith and hope.

Because of having the name "The Watchtower" this magazine justly has to render a similar useful service to the people of all nations. This is an international magazine and makes no racial distinctions, for we are all facing a common world danger; we are all hoping for a common good.

Ever since "The Watchtower" began to be published in July of 1879 it has looked ahead into the future, always striving to aid its readers to advance in knowledge and to gain a clearer picture of the glorious new order of things that is in store for righteous mankind. No, "The Watchtower" is no inspired prophet, but it follows and explains a Book of prophecy the predictions in which have proved to be unerring and unfailing till now. "The Watchtower" is therefore under safe guidance. It may be read with confidence, for its statements may be checked against that prophetic Book.

Among the many nations of today there are hundreds of differing religions. Which one does this magazine present? Not the confused religions of Christendom, but the religion of the oldest sacred Book on earth. Which Book? The Sacred Bible of the Holy Scriptures, written by inspiration in the name of the Creator of heaven and earth, the only living and true God.

The sacred, nonpolitical purpose of "The Watchtower" is accordingly to encourage and promote study of the Holy Bible and to give our many readers the needed unsectarian help to understand that Book of true religion and infallible prophecy. Thus this magazine will be helping them to prove worthy of perfect life and happiness in God's promised new order under His everlasting kingdom of righteousness.

NO DOUBT you have observed persons who, under provocation, did and said things they should not have. Perhaps they were even sorry and apologized afterward. Probably you have experienced such anger yourself and have seen the harm that can come by acting rashly when emotionally disturbed.

In the Bible there is an outstanding example of behaving rashly in a provoked state. It is that of Moses, who became provoked to anger with the Israelites on the way to the Land of Promise. These people were agitated and they demanded water from Moses. God told Moses to speak to a rock and water would issue forth. But Moses angrily said to the people: "Hear, now, you rebels! Is it from this crag that we shall bring out water for you?" (Num. 20:10) Here Moses made a grave error. In his provoked state he said "we shall bring out water," thereby taking glory away from God. As God told him: "You did not show faith in me to sanctify me before the eyes of the sons of Israel." —Num. 20:12.

Why did Moses sin with his mouth? Why did he behave rashly? Some are quick to put all the blame on Moses and say he just lost his temper. But was Moses an ill-tempered man, always looking for an argument? Just the opposite is true. The inspired Bible record informs us: "Moses was by far the meekest of all the men who were upon the surface of the ground." (Num. 12:3) No, Moses was not a rash man, but he acted rashly on that occasion because of the unrighteous actions of others. Moses was provoked, yes, pushed into anger by the bad actions of a rebellious people.

That Moses was pushed to provocation is seen by the account at Psalm 106:32, 33, which states: "Further, they [the Israelites] caused provocation at the waters of Meribah, so that it went badly with Moses by reason of them. For they embittered his spirit and he began to speak rashly with his lips." Yes, they were the root cause for his becoming angry.

On occasion the Israelites even provoked God to anger! "Now the people became as men having something evil to complain about in the ears of Jehovah. When Jehovah got to hear it, then his anger grew hot." (Num. 11:1) Also, at Deuteronomy 32:21 we read: "They, for their part, have incited me to jealousy with what is no god; they have vexed me with their vain idols." Yes, God himself was provoked. Why? Because of the bad ways of the Israelites. His anger was perfectly controlled, of course —something that was not true in Moses' case.

All of this shows that one who provokes another is in the wrong. A person might get provoked and in this condition speak or act rashly, since he does not have the perfect control that Jehovah has. True, the person behaves wrongly. But why has he done so? Because someone provoked him! Things were said or done that stirred up his emotions. Now, then, is the one who causes the outburst innocent? Not at all! If he had not provoked the other, then that person might never have become angered to the point of behaving rashly. It is as in the case of Moses. He, being "by far the meekest of all the men who were upon the surface of the ground," surely would not have lost his temper if the Israelites had not grossly provoked him.

So while you may recognize that one who becomes unduly provoked is falling short of exercising Christian love, you must also recognize the grave error of the one who causes another to become angered. It is true that in everyday life Christian love "does not become provoked." (1 Cor. 13:5) But it is just as true that Christian love does not provoke others. Actually, provoking another needlessly is a manifestation of hatred: "Hatred is what stirs up contentions." (Prov. 10:12) Of course, there are times when those in positions of responsibility must give counsel or correction to others, which, even though done lovingly, may provoke. But this is not the unnecessary provoking in everyday life that is being here considered.

By speaking unkindly to others, by being critical instead of forgiving, by not considering the human imperfection of others, by continually rubbing people the wrong way, a person becomes provocative. Then he can hardly expect good to come to him, for he goes against the very nature of man, who does not like to have others provoke him unnecessarily. Hence, what is it like when one speaks thoughtlessly? The Bible answers: "There exists the one speaking thoughtlessly as with the stabs of a sword." (Prov. 12:18) What can this result in? "A word causing pain makes anger to come up." (Prov. 15:1) So if you provoke others, do not be surprised to see their anger aroused.

Hence, it really is unchristian for one needlessly to provoke others by what one says or does. This violates the great principle, the great commandment Jesus pointed to when he said: "You must love your neighbor as yourself." (Matt. 22:39) It could cause one's fellowman to be led into error, as was the case with Moses at Meribah. And how does God feel about those who cause others to err? His Word tells us: "He that is causing the upright ones to go astray into the bad way will himself fall into his own pit."—Prov. 28:10.

Instead of provoking others, the wise person heals with his words and deeds. "The tongue of the wise ones is a healing." (Prov. 12:18) The wise person realizes that provocative words and actions arouse others to anger, so he avoids saying or doing things that provoke. He works hard to control himself so as to bring benefit to his fellowman instead of bringing him pain. Before taking a course of action that might provoke others, the wise one asks himself: How would I like it if someone said or did that to me?

Be like the wise person. Work hard to avoid provoking others. Apply the principle Jesus laid down in regard to human relationships, when he said: "All things, therefore, that you want men to do to you, you also must likewise do to them."—Matt. 7:12.

Why They Question the EXISTENCE OF GOD

IN THE February 24, 1962, issue of Ave Maria the Catholic Cardinal Richard Cushing observed: "For the first time in the history of mankind, atheism is on the march; and the Church is helpless to prevent the advance of anti-Christ." It is spreading rapidly throughout the world. The idea that there is no God not only has engulfed a large proportion of the more than one billion people ruled by communism, but it has made amazing inroads upon the thinking of persons in non-communist lands.

But why do so many persons today question the existence of God? Why is atheism now on the march, and the church unable to stop it? What is responsible for this unprecedented disbelief?

BELIEF IN GOD'S EXISTENCE

Philosopher Celestine N. Bittle wrote in his book God and His Creatures: "No people has ever been discovered which, in the strict sense of the term, is 'atheistic.' Individuals may be atheists; but a people, never. This universal belief is a tremendous fact." It is strong evidence that man was originally created with the inherent inclination to acknowledge God's existence.

In order to satisfy man's quest to know about Him, God provided man with an inspired record about Himself. In this account God also explains man's origin, why sickness and death exist and what hope there is for the future. The collection of these inspired writings is now generally known as the Holy Bible or Scriptures.
—2 Tim. 3:16.

The Scriptures are in harmony with man's inherent inclination to acknowledge God's existence and go to support it. They attribute the beautiful starry heavens, the marvelous earth and intelligent man to the handiwork of God. They state: "God created the heavens and the earth," also, "God proceeded to create the man." Yes, the evidence of the Scriptures, the natural dictate of human reason and the law and order that govern the universe all testify to the fact that God does exist.—Gen. 1:1, 27.

*More people are doing so today.
Do their reasons justify the conclusion that God does not exist?*

WHAT ABOUT HUMAN SUFFERING?

However, it is because of the unparalleled human suffering in the earth that many persons question the existence of God. This was pointed out by a retired Anglican medical missionary, Marian Sherman, who said last fall: "I became an atheist very largely because of the terrible suffering of Indian women who had never done anything to deserve it. How could an all-loving God allow this to happen? And we've had two ghastly world wars. It just doesn't make sense."

Not a few persons reason this way. A loving God, they feel, would not allow human suffering; and since suffering exists, they conclude, there must not be a God who is loving. Is this conclusion justified?

No, it is not. The existence of wickedness and the suffering it has brought to mankind does not arbitrarily rule that a God of love does not exist. Such a view overlooks entirely man's responsibility. It is like a patient who ignores a doctor's instructions, and then denies the existence of the doctor because he is suffering. Or it is like a machinist who refuses to follow the manufacturer's advice, and then, when his tools do not function properly, denies that the manufacturer exists. In such cases it would be foolish to question the existence of a compassionate doctor or a skilled manufacturer. The individual himself is to blame for the suffering and trouble.

It is similar with mankind today. The inspired Scriptures show that Jehovah God created the first human pair perfect, with the prospect of enjoying life in an earthly paradise as long as they lived. This provision was an evidence of God's love. But when mankind refused to follow God's instructions, they suffered the consequences. This did not mean a loving God does not exist. God had warned them in advance what would happen; so it was man, not God, that was responsible for the suffering, sickness and death that followed.—Gen. 1: 27, 28; Deut. 32:4, 5; Eccl. 7:29.

True, it would not be loving to allow this suffering to continue indefinitely. And this God has no intention of doing. Human wickedness and suffering have been tolerated only because an issue was raised in the garden of Eden. One of God's spirit creatures, identified in the Bible as Satan the Devil, influenced the first human pair, Adam and Eve, to disobey God. This called into question God's creatorship and his justice in demanding obedience as a condition for life and yet seemingly not creating man with the capability of remaining loyal to God.

So God has allowed a set period of time to settle this question of whether men can remain faithful under test. This period is now about up. Very soon Satan and all the human suffering he has been responsible for will be eliminated. It is the loving Creator who will provide this relief by ushering obedient mankind into a righteous new system of things.—2 Pet. 3:13; Rev. 12:12.

RELIGION'S RESPONSIBILITY

The churches of Christendom have not made clear to people why wickedness and suffering have been allowed to exist for a time on earth. Rather, they have taught lies about God, painting him as an unmerciful fiend who keeps humans alive in some subterranean lake of fire, where they cook and sizzle in excruciating pain throughout eternity. Such teachings have turned many away from God.

Many modern theologians and clergymen are even coming to terms with atheism. "I have preached more and more in the past decade on the values of atheism and agnosticism," wrote Episcopal Bishop James A. Pike. "There has to be a large measure of agnosticism in true religion," he asserted.* And Time magazine of June 9, 1961, observed that "Paul Tillich, America's most eminent theologian, talks of God as 'Being Itself' or 'Ultimate Reality.'" This characterization, however, says an article entitled "Is Modern Theology Atheistic?" appearing in the Protestant journal The Christian Century, "saves Tillich from the charge of atheism." But is not this sort of theology that borders on atheism enough to cause a lot of persons to question the existence of God?

It is therefore apparent that the churches, instead of building faith in God, have been responsible for millions of persons turning toward atheistic communism. Their conflicting teachings, religious persecutions, warmongering and currying the favor of the rich and influential have caused many to reason that, if the churches represent God, then there must not be a God.

* The Christian Century, December 21, 1960.

Many responsible churchmen admit religion's guilt.

"I know that it is we, we Christians alone, who are responsible for Communism," admitted the dean of a European theological school. "Remember that the Communists once were Christians. If they do not believe in a just God, whose fault is it?"* And the dean of the faculty at New York City's Union Theological Seminary acknowledged: "The very atheism of Communism is a judgment upon the churches, . . . which have usually been ornaments of the status quo, no matter how unjust it has been."†

The failure of the churches to imitate Christ and to provide accurate knowledge concerning God has prepared the way for atheism.

ATHEISM'S ADVANCE

Hundreds of millions of persons in Communist lands are being systematically taught that God does not exist, and indoctrination is being stepped up. "Atheism will be taught more intensively at party training centers and in special courses for teachers, doctors and journalists," Time magazine reported recently. This constant program of indoctrination, especially of the youth, has caused many to question the existence of God.

Often this propaganda reaches the West in newspaper reports. For example: "'The Bible says the Creator sent manna to the Jews,' Premier Khrushchev said. 'I don't know whether this is true, I did not see it happen. I don't know whether the manna was of first quality or whether the Jews got enough of it. To find out, we sent Gagarin up there to take a look. But Gagarin reported he saw nothing but emptiness. So we sent Valentina Tereshkova and told her if she finds manna she should cook herself a meal, but she found nothing. So there is no hope that we can get manna from heaven. This means that we must trust our hard-working hands.'—New York Times, April 7, 1964.

What a foolish basis on which to question the existence of God! But these persons did not first give up belief in God after the trips into space. Rather, in Communist-controlled countries, faith in God is undermined in youth by constant repetition by teachers and educators that there is no God. Others question God's existence because of seeing human suffering, and not receiving a satisfactory Scriptural answer for it. And still others have been turned away from God because of the conflicting teachings and the atheistic leanings of religious leaders.

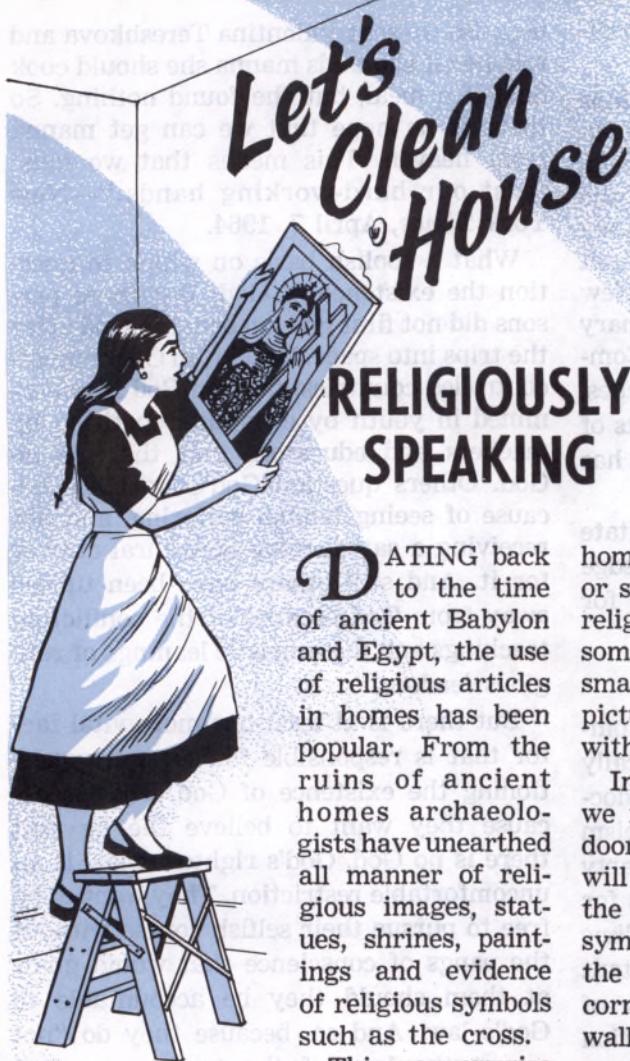

But there is at least one more vital factor that is responsible for so many questioning the existence of God. That is because they want to believe the lie that there is no God. God's righteous law is an uncomfortable restriction. They want to be free to pursue their selfish course without the pangs of conscience that would gnaw at them should they be accountable to God's law. And so, because they do "not accept the love of the truth . . . God lets an operation of error go to them, that they may get to believing the lie."

—2 Thess. 2:10, 11.

A wise person who loves righteousness, however, will never be turned away from God. He will regularly study the Bible, and will grow to love God for the marvelous provisions that He has made for life in a righteous new system of things. Indeed, it is the fool that "hath said in his heart, there is no God."—Ps. 14:1, American Standard Version.

DATING back to the time of ancient Babylon and Egypt, the use of religious articles in homes has been popular. From the ruins of ancient homes archaeologists have unearthed all manner of religious images, statues, shrines, paintings and evidence of religious symbols such as the cross.

This may surprise you, but it is a fact that religious articles and symbolisms used in ancient pagan Babylon and Egypt are in use today in many "Christian" homes. It is high time for those who want to be true Christians to clean house, religiously speaking.—Acts 17:29-31.

Before we examine what the Holy Bible has to say about cleaning house, religiously speaking, let us take a look at a typical Latin-American home, similar in some respects to homes in the Dominican Republic, Cuba, Puerto Rico and elsewhere.

As we near the house we notice a shrine along the sidewalk at the corner. The small hole in the front is for an offering to the image. As we enter the yard we note another home shrine with the image of family devotion, usually the national goddess or saint, differing from country to country. Some are very elaborate and costly. Near the door a cross can be seen. On knocking, we are welcomed into the hospitable home by the expression, "Adelante, tomen asiento." "Come on in, take a seat." The householder is pleased to show us her home. Did you notice that small platform or shelf over your head as we entered? A religious picture with a glass of water or something to eat is placed on it. Often such small platforms can be seen in front of a picture of a deceased member of the family with flowers placed before it.

In a humble home with an earth floor we note the cross again painted on each door. An elaborate one of metal or wood will be found in other homes. As we follow the housewife we note this same religious symbol over the beds on the wall and upon the home altar, which at times occupies a corner of a room or even possibly an entire wall. This is usually decorated with shiny papers of many colors along with religious pictures, candles or colored electric lights and flowers. Religious pictures of the "Sacred Heart" and "The Last Supper" will also be found in the rooms.

What are we to think of the use of these many religious articles and symbols? We must think what God thinks.

RELIGIOUS IMAGES

We are not to think that there is necessarily something wrong with every art object, an image or statue. So we must differentiate between objects that are simply works of art and objects of religious devotion, images used to represent some saint or deity. If one takes a worshipful attitude toward any image, making it a religious object, then the possessor of such image ought to reflect upon God's view of religious images. For instance, God commanded the Israelites of ancient time not to have any images to represent the true God. (Ex. 20:4; Deut. 4:15-19) Nor were they to bring the images or symbols of the pagan Egyptians and Canaanites into their homes. God's clear-cut declaration was:

"The graven images of their gods you should burn in the fire. You must not desire the silver and the gold upon them, nor indeed take it for yourself, for fear you may be ensnared by it; for it is a thing detestable to Jehovah your God. And you must not bring a detestable thing into your house and actually become a thing devoted to destruction like it. You should thoroughly loathe it and absolutely detest it, because it is something devoted to destruction."—Deut. 7:25, 26.

True Christians appreciate this same principle of a clean home, religiously speaking, especially in view of similar commands given in the Christian Greek Scriptures: "We ought not to imagine that the Divine Being is . . . like something sculptured by the art and contrivance of man." "Little children, guard yourselves from idols." (Acts 17:29; 1 John 5:21) So the early Christians kept their homes free of religious images. How, then, did images of Christ, for example, get started? By turning to history books dealing with the early Christians, you will learn this: "Heathens, who, like [Emperor] Alexander Severus, saw something Divine in Christ, and sects, which mixed heathenism and Christianity together, were the first who made use of images of Christ."* Since no images of Christ were used by the early Christians, it is evident they had no images of Mary, Jesus' mother, either.

So when an image becomes an object of religious devotion, it is time for the possessor of such, if he wants to be a true Christian, to clean house, religiously speaking—no matter what the image represents or who made it.

It is well for every Christian to remember what took place in connection with the figure of the copper serpent made by Moses. During the sojourn of the Israelites in the wilderness, God commanded Moses, who had led Israel out of Egypt, to make the figure of a copper serpent, which was a symbol and had prophetic significance, but it was not for religious worship. (Num. 21:4-9; John 3:14, 15) Thus the copper-serpent image was not adored or used for worship in Moses' day. Though that image was made under proper circumstances, even at the command of God, yet, finally, it had to be destroyed. How so? Because centuries after Moses' day the Israelites turned that same image of the copper serpent into an object of religious devotion, even burning incense to it. (2 Ki. 18:4) So when King Hezekiah purged the land of Judah of religious images, he had the copper serpent made by Moses crushed into pieces and utterly destroyed.

That destruction of religious images had God's blessing, since the true God wants to be worshiped without images or not through images, as Jesus Christ himself stated: "God is a Spirit, and those worshiping him must worship with spirit and truth."—John 4:24; 2 Ki. 18:1-7.

RELIGIOUS PICTURES

But what could be objectionable about pictures? After all, a Christian may properly have or display a photograph, a drawing or a painting. It may be of friends or relatives, of scenery or of Biblical subjects. Jehovah's witnesses, for example, have a calendar with a different illustration each year of an important Biblical event. Well, then, what determines whether a picture is objectionable? This: Is the picture revered or worshiped, perhaps food placed before it? Does the picture have pagan symbolism? Does the picture misrepresent the Bible?

* The History of the Christian Religion and Church, During the Three First Centuries, Dr. Augustus Neander.

Take, for example, a picture that appears in many interpretations, the so-called "Last Supper." Jesus instituted "The Lord's Supper" or, as a modern Bible translation calls it, "the Lord's evening meal," on the date of Nisan 14, 33 C.E., after 6 p.m., on a Thursday. (1 Cor. 11:20, 23, 24) Just before the Lord's Evening Meal, Jesus and his twelve apostles had eaten the annual passover lamb. But how many plates of fish do you see on the table of some paintings? Fish was not eaten by Jesus and his apostles that Thursday night, but, rather, the meat of a lamb. Pictures that show fish are misrepresenting the Holy Bible.

The Bible shows that, along with roasted lamb, unleavened bread was used for the passover. (Ex. 12:8-15) You will notice in some pictures that the buns, one for each apostle, are leavened or risen bread. The Bible account shows, too, that the faithful apostles ate from one loaf of unleavened bread; each did not have his own leavened bun.—Matt. 26:26.

The Bible also shows that all the faithful apostles were to drink from the same cup. (Matt. 26:27) In the pictures we usually are led to believe that after the passover meal and during the Lord's Supper each apostle had his own glass, while Jesus alone had a special chalice of wine. Actually, they partook of the same loaf and drank from the same cup.

You will note, too, that in many pictures all are seated. The custom in Jesus' day was to eat in a reclining position, as can be noted by reference to a Bible dictionary. The Bible itself shows that John was reclining on the bosom of Jesus, something he would be unable to do if seated while eating.—John 13:23-25.

How many apostles do you count? The Bible indicates that Judas left "immediately" after the passover celebration and hence before Jesus instituted the Lord's Evening Meal with the faithful eleven apostles. (John 13:30) Pictures showing twelve apostles along with Jesus do not portray the truth.

Thus our example shows misrepresentation of the Bible with regard to the passover lamb, the unleavened bread, the one loaf and the one cup, the manner of reclining and the number of apostles. When a picture misrepresents God's Holy Word, it is time to clear it out.

Then with regard to pictures of Jesus Christ, do you notice any halo or circle of light encompassing his head? This is called a "nimbus." You will find it revealing to go to a good encyclopedia and look up the word "nimbus," for you will learn that it was used by the ancient pagan Egyptians, Greeks and Romans in their religious art; such a symbol is of Babylonish origin, since it appears in artistic representations of the main deities of Babylon. The circle of light was the symbol of the sun-god, and thus it is paganism.

No picture that smacks of Babylonish paganism belongs on the wall of a Christian home.

THE CROSS

One of the symbols commonly seen in homes is the cross. Actually, the Holy Scriptures show that Jesus Christ was nailed to a tree or stake without a cross arm. The apostle Peter mentioned on at least two occasions that Jesus died on a tree (xylon). (Acts 5:30; 1 Pet. 2:24) The other original Greek word used in the Bible is stauros' and means a stake without any cross arms of any kind.

Even if it had been a cross upon which Jesus was impaled, would that be a fitting religious symbol for Christians? No, no more than one would adore or worship a bullet or machete that had killed a dear loved one! No wonder the early Christians had no crosses in their homes! "There was no use of the crucifix," says one historian of the early Christians, "and no material representation of the cross."^{*}

Where, then, did the cross come from? Centuries before Christ the cross was used by pagan religionists in India, China, Persia, Egypt and, of course, Babylon. The upright cross was the sacred symbol of the Babylonian god Tammuz. It was also the symbol of the sun-god Sol, in ancient Rome. Such a cross was the original form of their letter "T," the initial letter of the name of the god Tammuz.

Further, encyclopedias will tell you that ancient Egypt had a cross that was a symbol of immoral sex worship. The Egyptian cross, the ankh (crux ansata or handled cross), consisted of a "T" with an oval handle on its top representing the male and female reproductive organs. The Israelites did not use this pagan symbol of the phallic cross in their homes.

As it was in pagan Egypt, however, so also the use of the phallic symbol is common in Latin America and elsewhere. Some church buildings are built on its "T"-shaped design. On the cathedral in San Pedro Sula in Honduras the shield over the doors uses the cross and oval. As the ancient Egyptian tombs and mummies contained many crosses, so today burial places are filled with crosses, some with the oval included.

LET'S CLEAN HOUSE

What, then, should be our attitude toward images, paintings and crosses? As for images and statues, the danger comes when people bow or pray before these lifeless idols, when they offer food before them, when they view them as something holy. Though there is nothing wrong with a picture correctly portraying a Bible event, yet if one gives a picture reverence and worship, that is wrong. If it is a picture of a deceased loved one, does the possessor give it religious devotion? Then, of course, it is wrong. And if a picture misrepresents the holy Word of God or contains pagan symbolisms such as the halo or nimbus and a cross, then why have it around the house?

So look around your house. Do you have any religious images? Do you have any religious paintings with the pagan halo encompassing the subject's head? Do you have representations of a cross? Do you have any pictures toward which you have a worshipful attitude?

If you do, it is time to clean house. Your taking this positive step, without fear of man, toward the pure and undefiled worship of Jehovah God will mean obedience to the commandments of God. It will mean the end of all Babylonish paganism in artworks around your home. It will show your desire to worship God, as Jesus Christ stated, "with spirit and truth." So let's clean house, religiously speaking.

TAMMUZ WEARING CROSSES

"He [God] purposed in himself for an administration at the full limit of the appointed times, namely, to gather all things together again in the Christ, the things in the heavens and the things on the earth... that we should serve [or, be] for the praise of his glory."

GATHERED in Unity for

Ministerial Work

MODERN man finds himself in a complex and difficult situation. He is at cross-purposes with himself. On the one hand, in the last half century he has learned how to harness the forces of God's creation in a way and to a degree undreamed of in previous generations, or only dimly guessed at. Tremendous advances in means of communication and of travel, advances in the world of mechanics, also in the realms of medicine and of science—these have opened the door to wonderful possibilities. On the other hand, by those same means, under the direction and stimulus of ambitious and ruthless men, the door has also been opened to dreadful possibilities. Modern man can benefit himself in many ways hitherto unknown, but he also has within his grasp the means to just about ruin the earth and its inhabitants. Men are proud of their achievements, but at the same time, as foretold, "men become faint out of fear and expectation of the things coming upon the inhabited earth." Self-assuming, headstrong men, are forced to admit that these are "critical times hard to deal with." What a contradiction!—Luke 21:26; 2 Tim. 3:1-5.

² But when we turn our attention away from modern man to the Ancient of Days,

1. In what ways is modern man at cross-purposes with himself?

2, 3. What fine contrast is seen when we turn to the Ancient of Days?

the Creator, what a contrast! In chapter 7 of Daniel's prophecy, verses 9 to 14, he is described as being enthroned at Court, with many thousands standing before him and ministering to him.

³ In the context of that same prophecy it tells of fierce beasts, representing earthly kingdoms, striving against one another for preeminence and putting on great airs. But the solution of all their conflicts is in the hands of the Ancient of Days, the Supreme One. Judgment is given in favor of someone described as a "son of man . . . And to him there were given rulership and dignity and kingdom, that the peoples . . . should all serve even him. His rulership is an indefinitely lasting rulership that will not pass away, and his kingdom one that will not be brought to ruin." Giving further detail, the prophecy later says that "judgment itself was given in favor of the holy ones of the Supreme One . . . And the kingdom and the rulership and the grandeur of the kingdoms under all the heavens were given to the people who are the holy ones of the Supreme One.”—Dan. 7:13, 14, 22, 27.

⁶ These passages from God’s Word strongly impress on us the absolute sovereign right and unassailable position of the Supreme One, Jehovah. With him, all is harmonious and secure. There is nothing contradictory, as is painfully evident in the affairs of modern man. In his hands Jehovah holds the solution to all man’s problems and conflicts, seen in the rulership and kingdom which are safely entrusted to the Lamb, Christ Jesus, who is proved worthy to receive it. That others, a limited number of sinful humanity, are enabled to share in that rulership and kingdom is but an added, though wonderful, evidence of the riches of Jehovah’s undeserved kindness.

⁷ It is this latter aspect that was evidently in the mind of the apostle Paul when writing to the Christians, “to the holy ones who are in Ephesus.” He prays on their behalf: “May you have undeserved kindness and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.” He then explains that their adoption as sons of God through Jesus Christ was “in praise of his [God’s] glorious undeserved kindness,” and that the ‘forgiveness of their trespasses,’ based on Jesus’ shed blood and ransom, was also “according to the riches of his [God’s] undeserved kindness.”—Eph. 1:1-7.

⁸ With this in mind, the apostle then discusses the same lofty theme as already mentioned, that of God’s sovereign will and purpose and the position of all his creatures in relation thereto. There are no exceptions or exemptions. A person will sometimes say, “I did not ask to be born,” as if thereby seeking to be relieved of any sense of responsibility in life. But no. We do not owe our existence to chance. Jehovah is the Supreme One and he created all things, including the human family in original perfection, possessing the marvelous power of procreation. Out of respect and appreciation for the Creator, we ought to say that it is because of his will that we have come into existence.—Rev. 4:11.

⁹ In this frame of mind let us listen to what Paul has to say. He explains that God caused his undeserved kindness to abound toward us by making known the "sacred secret of his will. It is according to his good pleasure which he purposed in himself for an administration at the full limit of the appointed times, namely, to gather all things together again in the Christ, the things in the heavens and the things on the earth."—Eph. 1:9, 10.

7. How is Jehovah’s undeserved kindness emphasized in the early part of the letter to the Ephesians? 8, 9. (a) What attitude should we have toward life? (b) What disclosure did Paul make as to God’s will and purpose?

¹¹ Consider also the term "administration." It too indicates something of real importance, as it is usually used with reference to such things as the effectual management of governmental and legal affairs. Many readers of The Watchtower, when visiting a big convention, enjoy a close look at the various departments, seeing all that can be seen, but they do not linger when coming to a door with a sign over it marked "Administration." Ah! no, they do not want to become involved in that kind of responsibility.

JEHOVAH'S GREAT ADMINISTRATION

told the answer. It is Jehovah's good pleasure, "at the full limit of the appointed times, . . . to gather all things together again in the Christ, the things in the heavens and the things on the earth." (Eph. 1:10) From this we can at once learn several important things:

¹³ (1) There is but one gathering under the one administration. Man, however sincere, cannot build his own religious organization and claim that it is acceptable to God. (2) To be gathered in union with Christ calls for the spirit of willing submission to him as God's Anointed One, also the spirit of unity and willing cooperation with all others who are thus gathered. (3) As subsequently disclosed, there is a ministry committed by God to those who are gathered. (4) The fact that Jehovah is "to gather all things together again" implies a former state of happy unity, which for some reason was not maintained, but is to be restored. (5) The time element comes in. This great work takes place "at the full limit of the appointed times." So first we want to know, when is the full limit and when is the administration fully inaugurated?*

10, 11. What meaning and importance are attached to the terms (a) "sacred secret," and (b) "administration"?

12, 13. As expressed at Ephesians 1:10, what is to be learned as to God's administration?

and against his anointed one," but Jehovah laughed at them in derision and declared: "I, even I, have installed my king upon Zion, my holy mountain." When Jehovah's anointed king, Christ Jesus, was installed or enthroned, that was when the administration was set up. This did not take place at Zion, or Jerusalem, yonder in Palestine, but, as the scripture says, at "Mount Zion and a city of the living God, heavenly Jerusalem."—Ps. 2:2-6; Heb. 12:22.

¹⁵ It may be argued that when writing to the Ephesians, Paul speaks of the gathering in union with Christ as having already commenced. That is true, as far as steps to that end are concerned. It began at Pentecost, 33 C.E., with the first members of the Christian congregation when God's spirit was poured out upon them. (Acts 2:1-4) But neither while actively engaged in their ministry, nor at death, did they receive their full reward. As Paul wrote to Timothy: "From this time on there is reserved for me the crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, will give me as a reward in that day." (2 Tim. 4:8) Jehovah's great administration goes into full operation after the end of the Gentile Times in 1914.

shows. (Rev. 14:1; 12:1-13) Thus the work of the administration sweeps ever onward, completely fulfilling the will of the Supreme One exactly as he caused it to be recorded long ago in these words: "In the name of Jesus every knee should bend of those in heaven and those on earth and those under the ground, and every tongue should openly acknowledge that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father."—Phil. 2:10, 11.

¹⁷ So we are in the great day when we do well to heed those lessons pointing to the need for a clear vision of God's theocratic organization, also to appreciate the purpose for which we are gathered in unity under its direction, namely, for ministerial work. Additionally, this emphasizes the need for the spirit of submission and co-operation. These lessons become more sharply defined as we look farther into what Paul says on this same theme.

THE RIGHT SPIRIT FOR THE RIGHT PURPOSE

¹⁸ To highlight the need for the right spirit, it will pay us to look back, particularly at the earthly scene, and see why the original state of happy unity was not maintained. When mother Eve listened to what the serpent had to say about the forbidden fruit, it became not only a test of obedience, but also one of humility. Deceived by what she was told, she began to look at that fruit from a new viewpoint. It would give her, so she thought, a newly found independence, and the idea appealed to her. This is shown by the fact that she did not even wait to ask her husband about it, but went ahead on her own initiative. We can imagine her saying: 'Why not? I have a mind of my own, have I not? I know my husband has not had any of this fruit yet, but leave it to me; I'll see that he has.' And she did!—Gen. 3:1-6; 1 Tim. 2:14.

15, 16. (a) When and how did the gathering in union with Christ commence? (b) What marks the full inauguration of God's administration?

17. At this time what must we particularly heed?

18. On earth, how and why did the original state of unity come to an end?

¹⁹ No, we did not hear mother Eve talking to herself in the garden of Eden, but it is not uncommon to hear some of her daughters talk like that. Is that not the spirit of the world today, both nationally and individually? Even the smallest nations are demanding their sovereign rights and independence. That same spirit, too, is often shown by individuals who say, in effect: 'I have the right to live my own life my own way.' That is the underlying reason why many will not heed the message brought to them by Jehovah's witnesses. They know it will interfere with their independence. They and their rulers, similar to Eve, would rather listen to the boastful, froglike "unclean inspired expressions" that are inspired by the lying demons. Such propaganda stirs their spirit of proud independence and results in their being 'gathered together to the war of the great day of God the Almighty.'—Rev. 16:13, 14.

19. How is the spirit of the world manifest today, and to what will this lead?

20. What two alternatives face us today?

mighty. As Jesus pointedly said: "He that is not on my side is against me."—Matt. 12:30.

²¹ Using Jesus' illustration, we find that only the sheeplike ones are gathered to him; first, the "little flock," the Christian congregation making up the "new heavens," but now also since 1931 those "other sheep" who eagerly anticipate the blessings of the "new earth." The "other sheep" are not dealt with separately, but all become "one flock, [under] one shepherd," or administrator. Using Jesus' other illustration, fulfilled in this day when he is enthroned as King, we see that he described the "other sheep" as those who support and give good cooperation to even the "least of these my brothers," or followers. All others are judged by him as goats who, because of their stubborn independence, refuse or fail to give any such cooperation.—Matt. 25:31-46; Luke 12:32; John 10:16.

²² In this day when Jehovah will shortly 'break and dash in pieces' all those opposed to him and his anointed king, and will make "wars to cease to the extremity of the earth," let all of us be wise and respond in the right spirit to the appeals made in the same Bible passages, where Jehovah says: "Give in, you people, and know that I am God." "Serve Jehovah with fear . . . Kiss the son [Christ Jesus], that He may not become incensed . . . Happy are all those taking refuge in him."—Ps. 2:9-12; 46:9, 10.

²³ What is God's purpose for those of us who do respond and are gathered under Christ's administration? Is it just for our own blessing and salvation? Can we decide about this for ourselves? That would be most illogical, though some have made that mistake and have fallen out of the ranks. No, it is not according to what we may think, but, as Paul says regarding the foreordained 144,000, it is "according to the purpose of him [God] who operates all things according to the way his will counsels." So what is God's purpose? Notice the answer given: "That we should serve [literally, be] for the praise of his glory." Then observe in what immediately follows that we are told how to serve God's purpose acceptably. After speaking of himself and others who had been the "first to hope in the Christ," Paul then says that "you [at Ephesus] also hoped in him."

Froglike
"unclean inspired expressions"

²⁴ How had this been made possible? Paul explains that it was "after you heard the word of truth, the good news about your salvation." This clearly defines for us the will of the Supreme One for those who are gathered. We must not keep the good news to ourselves, but must let others hear about it so that they too can share and rejoice in the same glorious hope.

That is how we can be to Jehovah's glorious praise, and this divine purpose must be served under the direction of a single administration.—Eph. 1: 11-13.

²⁵ From another angle, a little farther on, Paul again argues in favor of God's supremacy and against our taking an independent view of things. He reminds us that we cannot take any credit to ourselves in becoming Christians. We have nothing to boast of. Rather, as Christians, "we are a product of his [God's] work." Nevertheless, though "saved through faith," we cannot be idle and neither can we decide for ourselves how to work out our salvation. Instead, as Paul expressed it, we are gathered in union with Christ Jesus "for good works, which God prepared in advance for us to walk in them."—Eph. 2:8-10.

²⁶ From the scriptures discussed under this subheading, the lesson to be learned and the issue involved are made quite clear. We must have the right spirit for the right purpose, the spirit of unselfish, whole-souled devotion to Jehovah in order to ensure our prosperity in the right works he has prepared for us. We not only must be gathered in union with Christ ourselves, but under him must share in gathering others by letting them hear the good news.

²⁷ Jesus said: "He that does not gather with me scatters." That makes the issue plain. If we refuse to come under or stay within his administration, then it is manifest that we have the wrong spirit for the wrong purpose. Any gathering sought to be done apart from Christ's administration must be in opposition thereto, however good the work and the motive may appear to be. As Jesus said in his previous comments, after being accused of expelling demons by means of Beelzebub, "Every kingdom divided against itself comes to desolation . . . if Satan expels Satan, he has become divided against himself; how, then, will his kingdom stand?" This explains why modern man is at cross-purposes with himself, in spite of his efforts toward unity. His motive is mainly a selfish one, and that is no basis for a genuine, lasting unity. Let us not be blinded or sidetracked into supporting the wrong administration.—Matt. 12:24-30.

THE GATHERING TAKES SHAPE

28. In what way is the Christian congregation seen to take shape?

29. How is the great crowd of "other sheep" seen in the temple picture?

You may say you understand this, but that it does not have any connection with you as your hopes are not heavenly, like those of the "little flock," but earthly. Many Watchtower readers might feel this way about it, but make no mistake. If you love Jehovah and have submitted yourself to him in dedication, symbolized by water immersion, then you come right inside the picture. For your encouragement we remind you that, after describing the formation of spiritual Israel, the temple or sanctuary class, John was given a vision of a great crowd of "other sheep" said to be "rendering him [God] sacred service day and night in his temple." We could not imagine a finer picture of close unity and concord!—Rev. 7:15.

³⁰ In support of this we read that God's "will is that all sorts of men should be saved and come to an accurate knowledge of truth." (1 Tim. 2:4) Today all sorts of people are responding to the good news and bringing themselves into harmony with it, being gathered into "one flock" under "one shepherd." The Scriptures make it plain that these all should by their conduct serve for the praise of God's glory by unitedly sharing in the ministerial work due to be completed before the accomplished end of the present system of things. From the days of the apostles onward the emphasis has been on the gathering of the Christian congregation of Christ's 144,000 joint heirs; but now, at the "full limit of the appointed times," the gathering work has taken on a wider sweep since 1931, coupled with great urgency because the time is short. We need all the help and encouragement possible, and it will therefore be good to take a close look at our ministerial work, both inside God's organization and outside.

30. How has the gathering work today taken on a wider sweep, emphasizing what need?

"Fully Accomplish

YOUR MINISTRY"

GOD has never left his people with nothing to do. He has put them to work, and as this comes as a commission from him it can properly be called ministerial work because it is in the nature of service rendered to him. Such work can therefore never be treated lightly, but should be viewed as a stewardship. It is a great privilege and brings much happiness, but it also carries a great responsibility. This should not deter us, for God well knows our imperfections and frailties, and in his undeserved kindness has made ample provision on our behalf.

² Such thoughts as these were evidently in the apostle Paul's mind when writing to Timothy, as found in his two letters forming part of the Holy Scriptures. Every page breathes the spirit of earnest exhortation and encouragement, coupled with timely warnings. For example, he wrote: "I solemnly charge you . . . preach the word, be at it urgently in favorable season, in troublesome season, reprove, reprimand, exhort, with all long-suffering and art of teaching." Then, after warning that many "will turn their ears away from the truth," he concludes: "You, though, keep your senses in all things, suffer evil, do the work of an evangelizer, fully accomplish your ministry." Note, however, that preceding these words we find a reference to that which points to the essential foundation for fulfilling such a ministry. What is that? Paul told Timothy: "From infancy you have known the holy writings, which are able to make you wise for salvation." Then he added: "All Scripture is inspired of God and beneficial for teaching, for reproofing, for setting things straight, for disciplining in righteousness, that the man of God may be fully competent, completely equipped for every good work."—2 Tim. 4:1-5; 3:15-17.

³ We cannot overemphasize the need to keep close to God's Word in all our ministry, both within his organization and externally in preaching and witnessing to others. These things are what distinguish Jehovah's witnesses from the churches of Christendom. We do not look to traditions, or creeds, or ideas of our own. In all our arrangements, in the conduct of meetings, in matters of discipline and control and finance, also in what we teach and our methods of teaching, everything has a Scriptural basis. If any alteration is made it is because of a better understanding of the scriptures related thereto. The Bible, God's Word, is the essential foundation for a successful ministry. There must first be a proper understanding of the Scriptures, backed up by a sincere and determined effort to put these things into practice, both in our lives and in aiding others who respond to the word of truth. Do not say it is beyond you. Many thousands of Jehovah's witnesses worldwide are meeting these requirements, and no one pretends for a moment that he is superhuman. They have learned how to use and how to rely on Jehovah's provisions, keeping close to him in prayer and keeping close to his Word and organization, which are the main channels of his holy spirit.—Phil. 4:13.

THE INTERNAL MINISTRY

⁴ When we think of the Christian congregation likened to a "holy temple for Jehovah . . . a place for God to inhabit by spirit," and that all sheeplike people are invited to render God sacred service in close association with the remnant of that sanctuary class still on earth, we are helped to envision the seriousness and scope of the ministerial work that must be done within God's organization. This is well illustrated in one aspect alone in what happened when David was making intensive preparations for the building of the literal temple and its services. He made detailed Levitical service assignments, including "four thousand givers of praise to Jehovah on the instruments that David said 'I have made for giving praise.'" These were duly put into effect by David's son, Solomon, who provided for regular temple services, including "the Levites at their posts of duty, to praise and to minister in front of the priests as a daily matter of course." That ministerial service of praise had to be performed in close unity, both in voice and action.—Eph. 2:21, 22; 1 Chron. 23:5; 2 Chron. 8:14.

are said to be in their infancy, like babes, but the whole objective is to grow up and advance to maturity, both collectively and individually. How this is done, under Christ the Head, is most fittingly expressed by Paul in these words: "All the body, by being harmoniously joined together and being made to co-operate through every joint that gives what is needed, according to the functioning of each respective member in due measure, makes for the growth of the body for the building up of itself in love."—Eph. 4:16.

⁷ But the apostle does not leave it there. As an additional factor he mentions the working or "functioning of each respective member in due measure." (Eph. 4:16) This brings in everyone, male and female, however young and immature or however old and frail. Do not say you are of no account. That is not true. In fact, as soon as you come in contact with Jehovah's witnesses you cannot fail to be a means of encouragement, if good progress is made by you. To find someone responding well in a home Bible study, or to see fresh faces at our meetings, not just once, but coming along regularly, is most encouraging to all the others and is an evidence of Jehovah's blessing and spirit on our ministry. It is also very upbuilding to see those who are beset by old age and infirmity making efforts at great cost to themselves to attend the meetings and have some share, however small, in witnessing to others. As with the human body, the smallest member plays its part in due measure. We may not be conscious of it when things are going well, but let something go wrong with even one of the smallest members, say, a toe with an ingrown nail, and we at once know about it! It is good to face up to the fact that we each can have some share in due measure in the ministry to be done within God's organization, or the local congregation to which we belong, "for the building up of itself in love." There is much to be done and always further progress to be made. In both illustrations growth is emphasized: "The growth of the body," and "growing into a holy temple for Jehovah." —Eph. 4:16; 2:21.

THE EXTERNAL MINISTRY

the world. A city cannot be hid when situated upon a mountain. . . . let your light shine before men, that they may see your fine works and give glory to your Father who is in the heavens." This ties in closely with the glorious picture in Isaiah's prophecy, fulfilled in our day, where Zion, God's organization, like a city on a mountain, is told to "Arise, . . . shed forth light"! And with what result? "And nations will certainly go to your light, and kings to the brightness of your shining forth. Raise your eyes all around and see! They have all of them been collected together; they have come to you." This, in turn, agrees exactly with the inspired statement concerning God's 'administration to gather (or collect) all things together again in the Christ.'—1 Pet. 2:5, 9; Matt. 5:14-16; Isa. 60:1-4; Eph. 1:10.

⁹ Now observe how Paul discusses our being light bearers as part of our ministry. In writing to the Corinthians he says that God "has indeed adequately qualified us to be ministers of a new covenant." He then contrasts this new covenant, made with the Christian congregation through Christ as mediator, with the old Law covenant made with the nation of Israel through Moses as mediator. He shows that the "administering of the spirit" under the new covenant is more glorious in every respect as compared with the glory of the "code which administers death . . . engraved in letters in stones." When Moses came down from Sinai with the two tablets of the Testimony, his face shone, "so that the sons of Israel could not gaze intently at the face of Moses." But Paul later explains that the real difficulty lay with the sons of Israel themselves. "Their mental perceptions were dulled. . . . In fact, down till today whenever Moses is read, a veil lies upon their hearts. But," he continues, "when there is a turning to Jehovah [in whole-hearted submission and devotion], the veil is taken away." Then, referring to the ministry given to those in the new covenant, or in close association with it as is true of the "other sheep," the apostle says that 'all of us, with unveiled faces reflect like mirrors the glory of Jehovah.'—2 Cor. 3: 6-8, 14-18; Ex. 34:29-35; Heb. 9:15.

¹¹ Yes, that is our commission, to make the truth manifest. We are not discouraged when we find that Satan "the god of this system of things has blinded the minds of the unbelievers," and hence their minds and hearts are heavily veiled. But not all are unbelievers. Many, very many, are still held as unwilling captives by Satan. They are "sighing and groaning over all the detestable things that are being done" in Satan's system of things, and it is part of our commission to "preach a release to the captives and a recovery of sight to the blind."—2 Cor. 4:4; Ezek. 9:4; Luke 4:18.

10. In what way can we "reflect like mirrors the glory of Jehovah"?

11. What can we expect as to the results and fruitage of our ministry?

¹² What a happy commission is ours and what a tremendous responsibility, especially in this day of the Kingdom's establishment! Said Jesus in his prophecy on the conclusion of this system of things: "This good news of the kingdom will be preached in all the inhabited earth for a witness to all the nations; and then the end will come." (Matt. 24:14) All of God's promises and prophecies must and will be fulfilled without exception. Sometimes they are fulfilled literally and sometimes in a figurative or spiritual way. That is the point Paul makes when he quotes the first recorded commandment: "Let the light shine out of darkness." That was fulfilled literally. Then he shows how the same is true in a spiritual way when he adds: "And he has shone on our hearts to illuminate them with the glorious knowledge of God by the face of Christ."—2 Cor. 4:6.

¹³ When we look at ourselves we may well feel that as mirrors we are very faulty. But, for our comfort and showing that we do not rely on human strength or wisdom in carrying out our commission, Paul explains that "we have this treasure [of the ministry] in earthen vessels, that the power beyond what is normal may be God's and not that out of ourselves." God has made provision whereby we can render acceptable service, though imperfectly. However, that does not excuse us from keeping ourselves as mirrors in as clean and good shape as we possibly can.—2 Cor. 4:7; see also 1 Corinthians 1:26-31.

UNITY ESSENTIAL

13. Why has God commissioned imperfect creatures with such a ministry?

14. What kind of unity is seen in the world, prompted by what motives?

world, too, efforts are made in this direction, though in comparison they seem slow and cumbersome. Generally, however, is it not true that the motive prompting the united front is often that of fear, fear of a common enemy? As soon as the danger is overcome, then all too often the old factions break out again. Unity prompted by such a motive is liable to crack and break. It is not love that binds them together; but it is love, a Godlike love, that alone will bring about and lastingly preserve real, genuine unity. Let us see how this operates among all who are gathered under Christ's administration.

¹⁵ Unity in any group of people must start with the individual. In this case we are concerned with Christians, or those who have become Christians. In order to become such, the first vital step is to come into unity with God. Often this is viewed as an emotional experience, a sudden conversion. But true unity requires a more solid foundation. To come into unity with God the individual must get to know the mind of God on all matters that properly concern him. That is one of the main reasons why God has given us his Word, the Bible. It expresses the mind and will of the Supreme One. As we study and get the understanding of it, our minds are influenced by the right thoughts and, in turn, we are moved to do the right works, those "which God prepared in advance for us to walk in them."—Eph. 2:10.

¹⁶ But the heart as well as the mind is involved. As we learn and grow in knowledge, so our appreciation of God, the Source of all knowledge and wisdom, should also grow. Our hearts are drawn out to him in gratitude and worship, leading us to take the step of dedication and baptism, resulting in a personal and unified relationship with Jehovah. In order to maintain that relationship and meeting of the minds, we need to continue our study of his Word. This is a constant necessity. As beautifully expressed in the Psalms: "Happy is the man . . . [whose] delight is in the law of Jehovah, and in his law he reads in an undertone day and night." With what result? "He will certainly become like a tree planted by streams of water that gives its own fruit in its season and the foliage of which does not wither, and everything he does will succeed." What richer blessing could you desire?—Ps. 1:1-3.

¹⁷ In confirmation of this we also recall in the Psalms the prophetic word that is applied to Jesus at the time of his baptism, when he said: "To do your will, O my God, I have delighted, and your law is within my inward parts." (Ps. 40:8; see Hebrews 10:5-7) How could Jesus say he delighted to do God's will, when he knew from such scriptures as Isaiah, chapter 53, that his dedicated course would entail the keenest suffering and reproach, being despised and pierced and crushed in 'pouring out his soul to the very death'? (Isa. 53:3, 5, 12) It was because his Father's Word and law were within his inward parts. From his perfect knowledge and memory of God's Word he knew his Father's mind on all these things, and this guided and sustained him throughout. He knew his death was "precious in the eyes of Jehovah," so he could say, as foretold: "To you [Jehovah] I shall offer the sacrifice of thanksgiving . . . My vows I shall pay to Jehovah." Jesus is the perfect example of one who is at unity with Jehovah.—Ps. 116:15-18; see also John 5:19, 30.

¹⁸ There is also the question of family unity to consider, for the New World society is made up of families, to a large extent.

15. What initial steps are required to come into unity with God?

16. How is the heart involved, leading to what blessed fruitage?

17. In view of all the suffering involved, how could Jesus say he delighted to do God's will?

18. What points are particularly stressed in the counsel given to wives?

The key to this is found in the words addressed directly to the husband, the family head. This is interesting. It comes in the detailed counsel given by Paul to both wives and husbands. We mention wives first, as both Paul and Peter do so when giving detailed counsel. (Eph. 5:22-33; 1 Pet. 3:1-7) In each case they stress the need for wives to be in subjection to their husbands, even as without question the "congregation is in subjection to the Christ" in everything. This is manifested by the "in incorruptible apparel of the quiet and mild spirit." This is essential to family unity. After all, in the case of the first human couple, was it not the wife who first went wrong and aimed the initial blow at family unity by her show of independence?—Eph. 5:24; 1 Pet. 3:4.

¹⁹ But the key to the problem was not given to the wives. Laying the responsibility primarily on the husbands, Paul says to them: "Husbands, continue loving your wives, just as the Christ also loved the congregation and delivered up himself for it." (Eph. 5:25) To fully appreciate and to learn how to apply this Christlike love in all its genuine warmth and purity and extreme unselfishness is the work of a lifetime. It is a further reason for keeping in close touch with the Sacred Record with all its information on this subject. As the husband learns more and more how to manifest this love, so the wife, as part of her wifely subjection, learns how to respond in the same key, and there is thus built up between them a unity that is a mutual source of strength and peace and great happiness. In turn, the children are reared in the same atmosphere and on the same principles, resulting in a happy, united family that is a credit to the New World society and, above all, to Jehovah. The situation is very different, of course, in a divided household, but still the dedicated parent, either husband or wife, should aim for family unity in a way consistent with Bible principles, seeking God's guidance and leaving the end results with him.

²⁰ Now we turn our attention to the appointed servants in the congregation, who correspond to the joints in the human frame. What is sometimes difficult for these servants to realize is that unity and humility go hand in hand. Why difficult? Because the question of position comes into the picture. The "anointed cherub" had a wonderful position "on the holy mountain of God," having oversight "in Eden, the garden of God," but he was not content. He schemed to go higher and, in Babylon's time, to 'make himself resemble the Most High.' (Ezek. 28:13-15; Isa. 14:14) Jesus' twelve disciples, when with him, were too ready to be concerned over the question of position, sometimes amounting to a "heated dispute," even before being definitely given any position at all. How like human nature! Jesus told them they must 'humble themselves like a young child.' Sometimes a woman comes into the picture, as with the "mother of the sons of Zebedee," who asked the Lord for special positions for her sons. Thus it would seem appropriate that servants and their wives and all others should heed Peter's counsel: "All of you gird yourselves with lowliness of mind toward one another, because God opposes the haughty ones, but he gives undeserved kindness to the humble ones."—Luke 22:24; Matt. 18:1-4; 20:20-28; 1 Pet. 5:5; see John 13:14, 15.

²¹ Paul, too, gave excellent counsel to the

20. Why is it important for servants to 'humble themselves like a young child,' and because of what dangers?

21. How does Paul apply the illustration of planting and watering to servants?

ministerial servants and the congregation at Corinth, where there were "jealousy and strife." He reminds them that the most responsible servants who do work such as spiritual planting and watering, are simply nothing without God, who alone can really make a congregation, like a plant, grow and make increase. We cannot make anyone see and believe the truth. It is only as 'the Lord grants each one' to become a believer and join the Christian ranks. Stressing unity, he adds: "He that plants and he that waters are one." Why? Because it is all one operation; "we are God's fellow workers." That does not relieve us of personal responsibility, however, for "each person will receive his own reward according to his own labor." —1 Cor. 3:3-9.

22. (a) Why did Israel fail Jehovah, and what illustration did he give them? (b) How did Jehovah apply the illustration?

sower and bread for the eater.' Applying the illustration, Jehovah says emphatically: "So my word that goes forth from my mouth will prove to be. It will not return to me without results, but it will certainly do that in which I have delighted, and it will have certain success in that for which I have sent it." For what purpose had God sent forth his word, assured of "certain success"? Speaking now of spiritual Israel, the Christian congregation, together with their sheeplike companions, the prophecy continues: "For with rejoicing you people will go forth, and with peace you will be brought in." Then follows a delightfully descriptive scene in appealing, figurative language of the restored and prosperous paradise condition, spiritually speaking, of God's dedicated people who are gathered in unity under his administration under Christ. "It must become for Jehovah something famous, a sign to time indefinite that will not be cut off."—Isa. 55:8-13.

23. What comfort and encouragement has Jehovah given us for today?

A Pattern of Action for Pleasing God

WHAT does pleasing God mean to you? Are you one of many persons who say: "The religion of my parents is good enough for me," or, "I was born in my religion and I'll die in it"? Or have you put off taking action in the matter of religion until you have made your position secure in the world, or done some things you want to do first? Perhaps you have wondered whether it is of any value to be pleasing to God, to be a friend of his. Whatever your position, your life is too valuable for you to assume any of these attitudes when there is ample information available to enable you to be sure as to what action to take, with the happiest, most beneficial outcome in view.

A realistic pattern for us can be found in the life account of the man Abraham, one of the relatively few men in history who became friends of God. A consideration of the account will convince the honest inquirer that there is nothing that any man could work for that would begin to compare in value with the friendship of God. But one who wishes to have this valuable friendship must be willing to take action to obtain it, for God is a God of activity and he requires active obedience on the part of those who would please him.
—Jas. 2:23.

Abraham was the tenth generation after Noah, descending through Noah's faithful son Shem. Nimrod, the grandson of Ham and the first king of ancient Babylon, did not prove to be, as his followers had hoped, the seed promised in the garden of Eden who was to bruise the Great Serpent in the head. No, this seed was to come through the line of Shem, the only family line that is continued for generation after generation down through the books of the Bible, until it ends with the coming of the true Seed of God's woman. This true seed proved to be the Son of Jehovah God.—Gen. 10:1; 11:10-26; Luke 3:23-38.

The Bible account opens with Abraham (who was then called Abram) living with his father in Ur of the Chaldeans, a very ancient city located in southern Babylonia. It became the capital of Sumer. The people of Sumer had many gods. But each city had its special god whom it considered to be its patron.—Gen. 11:28, 29.

Just as Marduk (Merodach) had come to be the god of the city of Babylon, so Sin was the city god of Ur. Sin was a moon-god, and was worshiped because the Babylonian year was a lunar year, making the moon very prominent in their calendar. He was considered to be the invisible lord of the city and its territory during peacetime and the leader of its army during wartime.

ABRAHAM ALOOF FROM BABYLONIAN RELIGION

Did this condition make Abraham's situation comparable to our day? Yes, because, just as today, there were many gods and much religion of the false variety. Also, religion had much to do with politics—with the State, just as it has today. C. Leonard Woolley, in a book entitled

"The Sumerians," 1929 edition, pages 128, 129, comments:

In considering the priesthood we have to remember that the Sumerian state was essentially theocratic. The god of the city was in reality its king; the human ruler, patesi (governor) or king, was simply his representative—the 'tenant farmer' of the god. Civil and ecclesiastical offices were not clearly distinguished. The king or governor was himself a priest, in fact in the case of the patesi the religious aspect was the older and in early days the more important; . . . The deification of the Sumerian kings only carried to its logical conclusion the theory that they ruled in the name of god. Conversely the high priest of one of the larger temples was a person of great political importance and was often chosen from the royal house. Church and State were so inextricably mingled that while the State has to be regarded as a theocracy the Church must in part at least be judged as a political institution and the state religion as a political instrument.

It is likely, therefore, that Abraham's father Terah participated in the city's idolatry, inasmuch as Joshua 24:2 says to the Israelites: "It was on the other side of the River [Euphrates] that your forefathers dwelt a long time ago, Terah the father of Abraham and the father of Nahor, and they used to serve other gods."—See also verse 14.

Regardless of his father's religious belief, Abraham (born 2018 B.C.E.) displayed faith in the God of Shem, who was still alive. The Christian martyr Stephen tells us that Abraham was in Ur when Jehovah commanded him: "Go your way out of your country and from your relatives and from the house of your father to the country that I shall show you; and I shall make a great nation out of you . . . and all the families of the ground will certainly bless themselves by means of you."—Gen. 12: 1-3; Acts 7:2-4.

It was a long trip northward from Ur to Haran on the Belikh River, sixty miles from where it joins the Euphrates. There Terah died and Abraham, now seventy-five years old, crossed the Euphrates into the land where descendants of Canaan, the uncle of Nimrod, lived. The date of this crossing was Nisan 14, 1943 B.C.E.—Gen. 12: 4, 5; Ex. 12:40, 41.

ACTIVE IN SERVING GOD

Abraham was not inactive, but immediately began to call upon Jehovah and to declare his name to the inhabitants of that land. He and Lot, his orphaned nephew, whom childless Abraham had taken into the land with him, were cattle raisers. Finally they separated, Abraham, not materialistic, generously allowing Lot to choose the well-watered region in the Jordan valley, a place fruitful "like the garden of Jehovah." In this region were the cities of the Plain, namely, Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, Zeboiim and Bela or Zoar.—Gen. 12:8; 13:5-13; 10:19; 14:2, 8.

Early during Abraham's stay in the land he proved himself a decisive, active fighter for true worship. For the five Canaanite kings in the area where Lot had settled joined in rebellion against King Chedorlaomer of Elam, a country east of Babylonia, who had held them in subjection for twelve years. In the fourteenth year, Chedorlaomer came with three other kings, including Amraphel, king of Shinar, to fight in the Low Plain of Siddim, near Sodom. The five Canaanite kings were beaten and Abraham's nephew and fellow-worshiper Lot was picked up and taken back toward Shinar or Babylonia.—Gen. 14:1-12.

Abraham was living in a place called Mamre, near Hebron. On being informed of Lot's capture, Abraham, who had left Shinar for good, certainly did not intend to let Lot be taken back if he could help it. So he mustered his 318 trained slaves and went in pursuit, accompanied by three confederates. This was no short pursuit of a few miles, but a long forced march up to Dan, more than a hundred miles north of Jerusalem and less than forty miles from Damascus. He was outnumbered, but with heavenly wisdom he divided his forces, defeated them and pursued them clear beyond Damascus, recovering all the goods and especially Lot his kinsman.—Gen. 14:13-16.

WORSHIPERS OF THE MOST HIGH GOD

Who was responsible for that victory? Genesis 14:18-20 tells us that, as Abraham marched back victorious toward Jerusalem, "Melchizedek king of Salem brought out bread and wine, and he was priest of the Most High God. Then he blessed him and said: 'Blessed be Abram of the Most High God, Producer of heaven and earth; and blessed be the Most High God, who has delivered your oppressors into your hand!' At that Abram gave him a tenth of everything."

So true worship had not been introduced into the land by Abraham, for here we find a very important worshiper of Jehovah already there, in fact, the first priest or cohén mentioned in the Bible, this one being a priest of the one living and true God, at the same time being a king, with appointment from the Most High God himself. He was king of Salem. According to ancient Jewish and Christian understanding, Salem was the original part of what became Jerusalem. Thus at this ancient city Abraham met the cohén or priest of Jehovah sometime before 1933 B.C.E. —See Psalm 76:1, 2; 147:12.

Melchizedek was a descendant of the Flood-survivor Noah, a human worshiper of the Most High God, not a materialized angel. But the Bible does not plainly say that he was Noah's son Shem, who was still alive. It purposely leaves out all information as to his ancestry, his descendants and his death so that he might serve as a prophetic picture or type of the promised Seed of God's woman, who becomes the everlasting High Priest of the Most High God, to give the sacrifice that results in eternal salvation for mankind.

The greatness of this man is described by the apostle Paul at Hebrews 6:20 to 7:7, in which he says: "In being fatherless, motherless, without genealogy, having neither a beginning of days nor an end of life [in the written record], but having been made like the Son of God, he remains a priest perpetually. Behold, then, how great this man was . . . the man [Melchizedek] who did not trace his genealogy from [the Levite priests] took tithes from Abraham [from whom the Levites descended] and blessed him who had the promises [from Jehovah God]. Now without any dispute, the less is blessed by the greater."

King David of Jerusalem wrote under inspiration showing that this coming one, who would be the greater High Priest like Melchizedek, would be a heavenly High Priest, when he said: "The utterance of Jehovah to my Lord is: 'Sit at my right hand until I place your enemies as a stool for your feet.' The rod of your strength Jehovah will send out of Zion, . . . Jehovah has sworn (and he will feel no regret): 'You are a priest to time indefinite according to the manner of Melchizedek!'" —Ps. 110:1, 2, 4.

Melchizedek, king of this city that later became Jerusalem, proved to be against Babylon, for he blessed Abraham for having routed and despoiled the king of Shinar and his allies. This proves that God's servants from the beginning were enemies of Babylon, for not only did Abraham get out of Babylon at God's call, but he also fought against the king of Babylonia (Shinar) when the need arose. Abraham attributed the victory to God in giving Melchizedek, God's priest, a tenth of the spoils while refusing to take anything for himself.

Differing from Nimrod, who opposed God and thereby caused his city of Babylon to be an enemy of God throughout its history, Abraham was blessed by Melchizedek. This blessing, coupled with God's promise recorded at Genesis 12:1-3, meant that the Seed of the woman would come through Abraham. He would have an offspring that would become a great nation, and it would be through this nation that the Seed of God's woman would come.

THE PICTORIAL SEED OF THE WOMAN

Abraham, still childless at the age of ninety-nine years, was visited by an angel of God who was sent to tell him that by a miracle he would have a son by his true wife, Sarah, in the coming year. God's covenant of blessing was to pass on down to this one, who would be called Isaac, meaning "Laughter."—Gen. 17:19; 18:1-15.

The next morning God's angels wiped out four of the wicked cities of the Plain. Lot had been moved out of Sodom in the nick of time by Jehovah's angels, along with his wife and two daughters. Zoar was spared so that Lot could find safety there. On the way, Lot's wife disobeyed the angelic instructions and was destroyed.—Gen. 19:12-26.

In connection with his loved son Isaac, Abraham was given a most taxing test of his faith. This was when God commanded him to take Isaac, who was then about twenty-five years old,* back toward Salem, not to see Melchizedek, but to offer his son Isaac in sacrifice back to the God who gave him. Abraham acted with works of faith and went to Mount Moriah to the north of Salem as directed. There he as good as offered up Isaac, his beloved son, in sacrifice. Abraham's faith was such that he did not waver in carrying out God's command. He knew that Isaac was to be the one through whom the great nation should come and he was sure that God would fulfill his promise by resurrecting Isaac from the dead if necessary. Just as he was about to use his knife, Abraham's attention was called by God's angel to a ram caught in a thicket, which he was to use as a substitute for Isaac.

UNPARALLELED BLESSING FROM PLEASING GOD

Now, at the altar side, Jehovah God confirmed his promise to Abraham, making it clear that Isaac, the son of Abraham's wife Sarah, was a picture of the Seed of God's woman. He called out by his angel: "By myself I do swear," is the utterance of Jehovah, 'that by reason of the fact that you have done this thing and you have not withheld your son, your only one, I shall surely bless you and I shall surely multiply your seed like the stars of the heavens . . . And by means of your seed all nations of the earth will certainly bless themselves due to the fact that you have listened to my voice.'—Gen. 22:15-18; Heb. 11:17-19.

Though Abraham did not know it, God by him performed a drama of tremendous significance to us. This was summed up by Jesus Christ nineteen centuries later when he said: "God loved the world so much that he gave his only-begotten Son, in order that every one exercising faith in him might not be destroyed but have everlasting life." This Son of God, Jesus Christ, was the One foreshadowed by Abraham's beloved son Isaac and by that male sheep that was offered up as Isaac's substitute. The Son of God became indeed the Lamb of God for mankind's salvation.—John 3:16; 1:29, 36.

How greatly Abraham was blessed for having acted on Jehovah's invitation to come out of Babylonia! Jehovah's covenant of blessing was made sure to him.

* Josephus puts Isaac's age at twenty-five years.—See Antiquities of the Jews, Book 1, chapter 13, paragraph 2.

He died at the good old age of 175 years, with a surety of resurrection during the Kingdom reign of Jesus Christ, the Seed of the woman. Jehovah personally transferred the covenant to Isaac, then to Isaac's son Jacob. Jacob had twelve sons, forming a foundation for that "great nation" of promise.—Gen. 26:1-5; 28:10-15; 29:1 to 30:26; 35:16-20; Heb. 11:13-16.

Abraham furnishes for us a fine example of faith along with works—action in obedience to that faith. He was not content to worship the idol gods of his fathers. He shunned false religion and stuck to true worship. He did not seek security in Ur of the Chaldeans, a highly civilized city. He went out into a land of which he knew nothing and lived as a stranger, in tents. He turned down rich materialistic opportunities in Ur. Yet how happy and purposeful his life was, and how fine a reward awaits him! If we wish God's friendship we must follow the course of faithful Abraham.

GAINING STRENGTH BY MUTUAL ENCOURAGEMENT

AFTER a long and perilous journey and much delay, the prisoner Paul the apostle at last arrived in Rome. Before his entering it, however, the brothers from Rome went out to meet him, coming as far as the Market Place of Appius and the Three Taverns. "Upon catching sight of them, Paul thanked God and took courage."—Acts 28:11-15.

Yes, even the apostle Paul appreciated receiving encouragement from his brothers, just as he had written them years before: "For I am longing to see you, that I may impart some spiritual gift to you in order for you to be made firm; or, rather, that there may be an interchange of encouragement among you, by each one through the other's faith, both yours and mine."—Rom. 1:11, 12.*

A word of encouragement gives refreshment, imparts confidence and gives strength—things we all so much need. Within we are beset with weaknesses that cause us to stumble, and without we are surrounded by a hostile world filled with all kinds of unrighteousness and which is constantly putting pressure upon us.

Men of the world tear one another apart and have no compunction about causing others distress. They may flatter for ulterior reasons, but flattery is not encouragement. Flattery is false, insincere or is excessive praise, meant to appeal to one's vanity. How can it give true encouragement?—Prov. 28:23.

Jehovah God is foremost when it comes to giving encouragement. By means of his sure promises and his merciful dealings he imparts strength to his creatures.—Heb. 6:17-19; Ps. 103:13, 14.

Second only to Jehovah God in giving encouragement was and is Jesus Christ. He gave encouragement by his words, by his zealous activity and by his example of unselfishness. (Matt. 11: 28-30) His apostles were likewise encouraging. What encouragement Paul gave by means of his many letters and his personal visits! And then there was Peter, who wrote his first letter "to give encouragement." This he did, among other things, by reminding his brothers of their hope, which hope gave them such strength that they were able to rejoice even in tribulation.—1 Pet. 5:12.

At times we may feel we need encouragement and be disappointed because of not receiving it. But instead of looking to others for encouragement, why not, rather, be looking for opportunities to give encouragement to others, since there is more happiness in giving encouragement than in receiving it? And there are so many ways in which we can do this. Sincere words of commendation can mean much and so can warm appreciation for a kindness shown. A friendly smile, an act of kindness, or just one's fellowship at times may give encouragement. Encouraging also are a zealous example, the imparting of some gem of truth, the relating of an experience enjoyed in the Christian ministry and the showing of concern for those who may be sick by a card or a personal visit.—Acts 20:35.

And what opportunities there are for giving encouragement in the family circle! Husbands can be very encouraging to their wives by expressing appreciation for their efforts to be good housekeepers and good cooks or for their part in the Christian ministry. Wives can be very encouraging to their husbands by putting spiritual interests first and by being loyal and submissive. Nor would we overlook the obligation that parents have to be encouraging to their children so that they do not become downhearted.—Prov. 31:28; Col. 3:21.

Even children can give encouragement to their parents. How so? By expressing appreciation for all that their parents provide for them, by listening and obeying when they are spoken to, by being willing workers, taking the initiative as they see things that need to be done.—Eph. 6:1-3.

But in particular does the overseer in each congregation have many opportunities to impart strength by giving encouragement, he having so much greater influence by reason of his position. He must be careful, therefore, not to drive the brothers beyond their capacity, not expecting too much from them but showing consideration for their individual physical and mental weaknesses and limitations. He will not consider himself as being above others but will make it easy for others to come to him. He can also give encouragement by showing his brothers how to do things, by setting a fine example of zealous service himself and by dealing mercifully with erring ones, in mildness restoring them.—Gal. 6:1; 1 Pet. 5: 1-3.

Today Jehovah's people have a great work to do, and to perform it faithfully requires strength. Much of the strength needed can be gained by imitating Jehovah God, Jesus Christ and the apostles in our giving encouragement to one another.

- Could it be said that the angel of Revelation 14:6 who had "everlasting good news to declare" symbolizes the "faithful and discreet slave" class? Also, what do the second and the third angels symbolize at Revelation 14:8, 9? —R. W., U.S.A.

The three angels, discussed in The Watchtower of October 1, 1963, in the article "'Everlasting Good News' for the 'Time of the End'" do not symbolize the "faithful and discreet slave," the governing body, the Watch Tower Society or other visible overseers of God's people. Instead, all three giving their messages would indicate that there is participation by angels in the preaching work. This is indicated, for example, regarding the first angel when, on page 590 of that Watchtower, it is said: "Since the year 1919 he, or the angelic organization that he symbolizes, has been seeing to it that this territory and its population are being reached with the glad tidings." The preachers of the Kingdom message on earth catch up the angelic pronouncements as recorded in the book of Revelation and herald these; they do so under angelic direction.

- How are the remnant of the anointed members of Christ's body "caught away in clouds to meet the Lord in the air," thus 'always being with the Lord'?—1 Thess. 4:17.

1 Thessalonians 4:16, 17 reads: "The Lord himself will descend from heaven with a commanding call, with an archangel's voice and with God's trumpet, and those who are dead in union with Christ will rise first. Afterward we the living who are surviving will, together with them, be caught away in clouds to meet the Lord in the air; and thus we shall always be with the Lord."

At Christ's second presence those of the anointed ones who had already died were to be resurrected first. Christ, in 'descending from heaven,' did not come down from heaven literally and bodily, but he turned his attention to and extended his power toward the earth. (Compare Genesis 11:5, 7.) He issued from his throne a "commanding call, with an archangel's voice," to his followers on earth. Christ Jesus is Michael the archangel, in charge of the holy angels at his presence. (Matt. 25:31; Rev. 12:7) As foretold at Daniel 12:1, 2, he was to stand up, and at that time many asleep in the dust of the earth were to wake up. At Revelation 11:7, 8, 12 we find a similar picture, with God's witnesses on the ground as dead being given the command by a loud voice out of heaven to "Come on up here." And they go up into heaven in the cloud.

So Christ, the archangel, uttered the loud command for his people to wake up out of the dust from the spiritually dead, sleeping condition they were in in 1918, in fear and captivity to Babylon the Great, and to become alive with activity, and this they did starting in 1919. This was accompanied by the sound of God's "trumpet," and so it takes place during the time of the trumpetlike proclamation that the great King has taken his throne.

They were "caught away" by being "snatched away" or delivered from bondage to Babylon the Great and her political paramours and brought into a free theocratic organization under the invisible Lord. A similar illustration is found in the parable of the wheat and the weeds in which the wheat class are spoken of as being harvested; and at Luke 17:34, 35 they are said to be "taken along." They are like those taken into the ark with Noah, and like Lot and his family, who were taken by the angels into a place of safety. They are separated from this world, taken to serve as witnesses in the day of judgment for upholding the issue of Jehovah's sovereignty.

Something in a cloud is invisible to human observers on earth, just as Christ was at his ascension when "a cloud caught him up from their vision." (Acts 1:9) The remnant on earth are not invisible bodily, but certainly this position into which they are brought during the time of Christ's invisible presence is not at all seen or recognized by the world. This catching away of them takes place "together with them," or during the same time period as the resurrection of the faithful followers of Christ who have already died.

To "meet the Lord in the air" would not mean for the surviving remnant on earth to go to heaven directly. For millenniums Satan the Devil has been "the ruler of the authority of the air, the spirit that now operates in the sons of disobedience." (Eph. 2:2) So 'meeting the Lord in the air' would mean their coming to know that the spirit Lord, Jesus Christ, is in authority in the air since ousting Satan from heaven, and their being brought into relationship with him in this authoritative capacity, being at unity with him at God's spiritual temple and doing God's will, carrying out the work he wants done on the earth at this time. The anointed remnant are now in this condition and, remaining therein until they finish their earthly course in death, they will be resurrected out beyond our atmosphere to the actual presence of the Lord in heaven just as those faithful followers who preceded them have been, thus 'always being with the Lord.'
