RELIGIOUS IMAGES

HOW DO YOU VIEW THEM?

IN 1888 there was massive flooding in Canton, China. Continuous rain ruined the crops. Desperately the peasants prayed to their god Lung-wong to make the downpour cease, but in vain. Angered by the indifference of their deity, they jailed his image for five days! Some years before, the same god had ignored their prayers to end a drought. They chained his image outdoors in the searing heat.

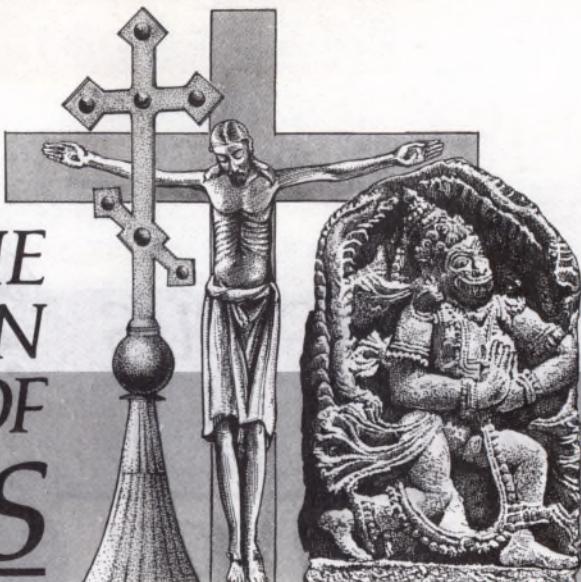

In 1893 a drought struck Sicily. Religious processions, candles lit in the churches, and prayers to images all failed to produce rain. Having lost patience, the peasants stripped some images of their robes, turned the faces of others to the wall, and even dunked some in horseponds! In Licata, "Saint" Angelo was stripped, chained, reviled, and threatened with hanging. In Palermo, Italy, "Saint" Joseph was dumped in a parched garden to await rain.

These incidents, related in the book The Golden Bough, by Sir James George Frazer, have disturbing implications. They indicate that both professed Christians and non-Christians seem to have identical views of religious images. In both cases, worshipers used their images as a means of contacting a "saint" or a god. And interestingly, both tried to spur their tardy "saints" or gods to action by inflicting upon them the uncomfortable conditions their worshipers were experiencing!

Today, though, many who use religious images would view such actions as extreme, perhaps even laughable. They would argue that for them images are merely objects of respect—not worship. They might even claim that statues, crosses, and religious paintings are legitimate aids in worshiping God. Perhaps you feel the same way. But the question is: How does God feel about this? Could it be that veneration of an image really amounts to worshiping it? Is it possible that such practices actually pose hidden dangers?

THE CHRISTIAN VIEW OF IMAGES

“YOU broke with idolatry . . . and became servants of the real, living God,” wrote the apostle Paul to Christians in Thessalonica. (1 Thessalonians 1:9*) Yes, many early Christians were at one time pagan idolaters. (1 Corinthians 6: 9-11) But upon becoming Christians, they ceased idolatrous practices.

Bowing before idols was so common, however, that Christians were mocked because they worshiped without images. Some pagans even accused them of being atheists! How, then, did the veneration of images later become so widespread in Christendom?

Christendom's Images —From Where?

Many pagan practices were introduced among “Christians” after the so-called conversion of the Roman emperor Constantine. “From the days of Constantine,” states religious historian Edwyn Bevan in his book Holy Images, “the use of the Cross as a symbol throughout the Christian world became common and forms of homage were soon addressed to it.” This paved the way for other forms of image worship. The same book observes: “It seems probable that before the offering of homage to pictures and images the custom had come in of offering homage to the symbol of the Cross, which itself . . . is not found on Christian monuments or objects of religious art before Constantine set the example in the labarum [military standard incorporating a cross].”

This development continued. In the eighth century C.E., John of Damascus, considered a “saint” by the Roman Catholic and the Eastern Orthodox churches, wrote: “As the holy Fathers overthrew the temples and shrines of the devils, and raised in their places shrines in the names of Saints and we worship them, so also they overthrew the images of the devils, and in their stead raised images of Christ, and God’s Mother, and the Saints.”

To this, Thomas Aquinas, Roman Catholic “saint” of the 13th century, added: “The same reverence should be displayed towards an image of Christ and towards * Unless otherwise marked, all Scripture quotations are from the Catholic Jerusalem Bible.

Christ Himself . . . The Cross is adored with the same adoration as Christ, that is, with the adoration of latria [Catholic definition for the highest form of worship], and for that reason we address and supplicate the Cross just as we do the Crucified Himself."

Aquinas is still viewed as an important contributor to the doctrine of the "veneration of images." According to the New Catholic Encyclopedia, the "veneration of images" had to await him "to find its own fullest explanation." Nevertheless, it is clear that "Christian" image worship merely served to replace pagan image worship.

Justifying the Use of Religious Images

Many today who venerate religious images would object to being called image worshipers. Their objections to such a designation, however, are not new. In the fourth century, so-called Saint Augustine mocked the reasonings of idol-worshiping non-Christians, saying: "There is a certain disputer who seemeth unto himself learned, and saith, I do not worship that stone, nor that image which is without sense; . . . I worship not this image; but I adore what I see, and serve him whom I see not." In other words, they claimed to worship only the invisible person represented by their idols. "By giving this account of their images," Augustine added, "they seem to themselves able disputants, because they do not worship idols, and yet do worship devils."—Expositions on the Book of Psalms by Augustine, Psalm xcvi 9.

Though Roman Catholic theologians have been quick to condemn pagan idolatry, when it comes to their own use of images, they have often resorted to the very justifications that the so-called pagan has used. For example, regarding images of Christ, Mary, and the "saints," the 16th-century Council of Trent declared: "Due honor and veneration is to be given them; not, however that any divinity or virtue is believed to be in them by reason of which they are to be venerated." Why, then, the veneration? "Because the honor which is shown them," explained the council, "is referred to the prototypes which they represent, so that by means of the images which we kiss and before which we uncover the heads and prostrate ourselves, we adore Christ and venerate the saints, whose likeness they bear."

To this day the Roman Catholic Church continues to justify idolatry on the same grounds: that images are simply a means to focus attention upon the heavenly one represented by them and that no virtue or power resides in the images. To what extent, though, has this proved true in actual practice? Do all who use images really believe that there is no 'divinity or virtue in them'?

Images—The Worshiper's Viewpoint

In Seville, Spain, a fanatical rivalry exists between the followers of the Virgin la Macarena and the Virgin de la Esperanza. In Chartres Cathedral, France, there are three Virgins—Our Lady of the Pillar, Our Lady of the Crypt, and Our Lady of the "Belle Verriere"—each having its own devotees. Apparently the worshipers are convinced that their image of the Madonna is somehow superior to the other images—even though all three images represent the same person! Clearly, then, homage is being paid, not to what is represented, but to the images themselves.

So, what the Roman Catholic Church excuses as relative worship often turns out to be actual worship of an image. Theological subtleties mean very little in the face of centuries of actual practice.

What Does the Bible Say?

The Bible's counsel contradicts the theories of theologians. God made plain to ancient Israel that idolatry was totally condemned. (Exodus 20:4, 5; Deuteronomy 4:15-19) True, some representations, such as the copper serpent Moses made, were permitted. Bowing down in worship of such objects, though, was strictly forbidden.—Numbers 21:9; 2 Kings 18:1, 4.

At times Israel disobeyed this prohibition on idolatry. For example, at Sinai, Israel made a golden calf for worship. How blasphemous it was for them to 'exchange God's glory for a representation of a bull, an eater of vegetation'! (Psalm 106:20, NW) But like some religionists today, they claimed to worship, not the bull, but God himself! "Here is your God, Israel," they cried 'who brought you out of the land of Egypt!' (Exodus 32:1-5) Jehovah, however, did not tolerate this "relative" worship, this blatant reversion to Egyptian religion. (Acts 7:39-41) It directly violated the covenant they had entered into at Sinai, and it brought Israel into danger of obliteration.—Exodus 32:9, 10, 30-35; Deuteronomy 4:23.

Why, though, did Jehovah God take such a strong position against images? For one thing, images are powerless; they are nothing. (Deuteronomy 32:21a; Psalm 31:6) Jeremiah said they were like scarecrows, with no breath in them. (Jeremiah 10:5, 14) Isaiah likewise ridiculed those who use part of a tree to make a fire for cooking and another part to make a god. The prophet warns that such idol worshippers "know nothing, understand nothing. Their eyes are shut to all seeing, their heart to all reason."—Isaiah 44:13-18.

One particularly lethal danger connected with image worship is the possibility of an image serving as a contact point with demonic forces. The psalmist said of the Israelites: "Serving the pagans' idols, they found themselves trapped into sacrificing their own sons and daughters to demons." (Psalm 106:35-37; compare Leviticus 17:7; Deuteronomy 32:17.) As a result, the way was opened for other superstitious, spiritistic practices. Another example is that of King Manasseh, who revived idolatry in Israel. Subsequently, "he built altars to the whole array of heaven in the two courts of the Temple" and "practised soothsaying and magic."—2 Kings 21:1-6.

The Christian Greek Scriptures warn of the same dangers. The New Bible Dictionary says: "The Old Testament polemic against idolatry . . . recognizes the same two truths which Paul was later to affirm: that the idol was nothing, but that nevertheless there was a demonic spiritual force to be reckoned with, and that the idol therefore constituted a positive spiritual menace." Paul wrote: "We know that idols do not really exist in the world and that there is no god but the One." But later he warned: "The sacrifices that they offer they sacrifice to demons who are not God. I have no desire to see you in communion with demons."—1 Corinthians 8:4; 10:19, 20.

Yes, wicked spirit forces are eager to bring individuals under their control. Paul wrote: "For it is not against human enemies that we have to struggle, but against the Sovereignties and the Powers who originate the darkness in this world, the spiritual army of evil in the heavens." (Ephesians 6:12) Image worship of any sort therefore deadens one's spiritual perceptions, encourages superstition, and facilitates manipulation by the occult rulers of this dark, evil world.

Worshiping 'in Truth'

Many sincere people use images to draw closer to the Hearer of prayer. Drawing close to God is desirable. But are we free to choose our own method of approach?

Surely we must seek the approach that pleases God, not our own. Jesus said: "I am the Way, the Truth and the Life. No one can come to the Father except through me." (John 14:6) This would preclude using idolatrous images. Jesus further taught: "But the hour will come—in fact

Do 'Icons Never Become Idols'?

"Icon" refers to a specific kind of image, namely, religious paintings venerated by members of the Eastern Orthodox Church. Some are representations of Christ; others represent the Trinity, Mary, "saints," or angels. Like Roman Catholics, Orthodox theologians justify the veneration of icons as a relative act that passes devotion on to the heavenly one represented. "The icon," claims Russian theologian, Sergey Bulgakov, "remains only a thing and never becomes an idol or a fetish."

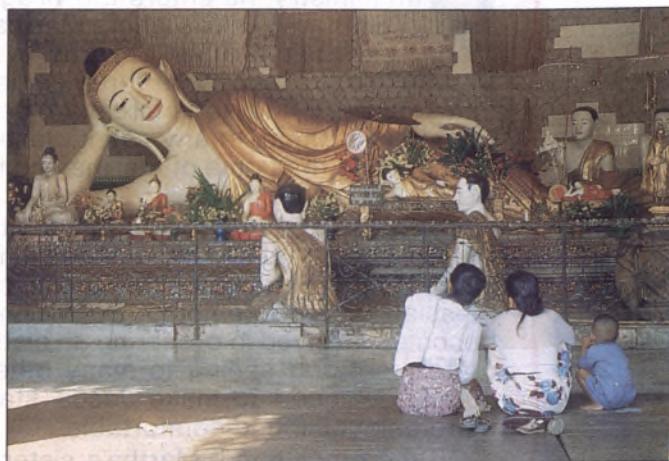

At the same time, though, the Eastern Orthodox Church teaches that an icon can bring special benefits to a worshiper who prays in front of it, provided the icon has been "sanctified" by the church. "The rite of the blessing of the icon," states Bulgakov in his book The Orthodox Church, "establishes a connection between the image and its prototype, between that which is represented and the representation itself. By the blessing of the icon of Christ, a mystical meeting of the faithful and Christ is made possible. It is the same with the icons of the Virgin and the Saints; their icons, one may say, prolong their lives here below."

Furthermore, many icons of Mary are believed to possess miraculous powers. "Although she remains in heaven," asserts Bulgakov, "she still lives with us the life of our world, suffers with its suffering, and weeps with its tears. She intercedes for the world before the throne of God. She reveals herself to the world in her wonder-working icons."

it is here already—when true worshippers will worship the Father in spirit and truth: that is the kind of worshipper the Father wants. God is spirit, and those who worship must worship in spirit and truth."

—John 4:23, 24.

Can one who is spirit be represented by a material image? No. Regardless of how imposing an image may be, it can never match the glory of God. So an image of God could never be truthful. (Compare Romans 1:22, 23.) Would a person therefore be 'worshiping in truth' if he approached God through some fraudulent image?

Jehovah's Witnesses have helped thousands of individuals forsake idolatrous practices and become 'the kind of worshippers the Father wants.' After being shown from the Bible how God views images, many have been moved to eliminate images from their homes and their form of worship. (Compare Deuteronomy 7:25.) True, it has not always been easy for such ones to do so. But they have been moved by a sincere desire to adhere closely to God's Word the Bible, which exhorts true Christians: "Children, be on your guard against false gods [literally, idols]."

—1 John 5:21, footnote.

Counsel to Martha, and Instruction on Prayer

DURING the course of Jesus' Judean ministry, he enters the village of Bethany. This is where Martha, Mary, and their brother Lazarus live. Perhaps Jesus met these three earlier in his ministry and so is already close friends with them. In any event, Jesus now goes to the home of Martha and is welcomed by her.

Martha is eager to provide Jesus with the very best that she has. Indeed, it is a great honor to have the promised Messiah visit one's home! So Martha becomes involved in preparing an elaborate meal and seeing to many other details designed to make Jesus' stay more enjoyable and comfortable.

On the other hand, Martha's sister Mary sits down at Jesus' feet and listens to him. After a while, Martha approaches and says to Jesus: "Lord, does it not matter to you that my sister has left me alone to attend to things? Tell her, therefore, to join in helping me."

But Jesus refuses to say anything to Mary. Rather, he counsels Martha for being overly concerned with material things. "Martha, Martha," he kindly reproves, "you are anxious and disturbed about many things. A few things, though, are needed, or just one." Jesus is saying that it is not necessary to spend a lot of time preparing many dishes for a meal. Only a few or even just one dish is sufficient.

Martha's intentions are good; she wants to be a hospitable hostess. Yet, by her anxious attention to material provisions, she is missing out on the opportunity to receive personal instruction from God's own Son! So Jesus concludes: "For her part, Mary chose the good portion, and it will not be taken away from her."

Later, on another occasion, a disciple asks Jesus: "Lord, teach us how to pray, just as John also taught his disciples." Possibly this disciple was not present about a year and a half earlier when Jesus provided the model prayer in his Sermon on the Mount. So Jesus repeats his instructions but then goes on to give an illustration to emphasize the need to be persistent in prayer.

"Who of you will have a friend," Jesus begins, "and will go to him at midnight and say to him, 'Friend, loan me three loaves, because a friend of mine has just come to me on a journey and I have nothing to set before him?' And that one from inside says in reply, 'Quit making me trouble. The door is already locked, and my young children are with me in bed; I cannot rise up and give you anything.' I tell you, Although he will not rise up and give him anything because of being his friend, certainly because of his bold persistence he will get up and give him what things he needs."

By this comparison Jesus does not mean to imply that Jehovah God is unwilling to respond to petitions, as was the friend in his story. No, but he is illustrating that if an unwilling friend will respond to persistent requests, how much more so will our loving heavenly Father! So Jesus continues: "Accordingly I say to you, Keep on asking, and it will be given you; keep on seeking, and you will find; keep on knocking, and it will be opened to you. For everyone asking receives, and everyone seeking finds, and to everyone knocking it will be opened."

Jesus then makes a reference to imperfect, sinful human fathers, saying: "Indeed, which father is there among you who, if his son asks for a fish, will perhaps hand him a serpent instead of a fish? Or if he also asks for an egg, will hand him a scorpion? Therefore, if you, although being wicked, know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more so will the Father in heaven give holy spirit to those asking him!" Indeed, what motivating encouragement Jesus provides to be persistent in prayer.

Reach Your Child's Heart From Infancy

"Go on bringing [your children] up in the discipline and mental-regulating of Jehovah."—EPHESIANS 6:4.

JESUS CHRIST and his disciples were on their way to Jerusalem. Not long before, on two different occasions, Jesus had told his disciples that he would undergo many sufferings and be put to death in that city. (Mark 8:31; 9:31) During this especially trying period for Jesus, the Bible account says: "People began to bring him also their infants for him to touch these."—LUKE 18:15.

1. What occurred during a particularly trying period in Jesus' life?

<sup>2</sup> What response was there to this? Well, the disciples scolded the people and tried to send them away, no doubt believing that they were doing Jesus a favor by protecting him from unnecessary disturbance and stress. But Jesus became indignant with his disciples, saying: "Let the young children come to me; do not try to stop them' . . . And he took the children into his arms and began blessing them." (Mark 10:13-16) Yes, despite all that must have been on his mind and heart, Jesus took time for infants.

What Lesson for Parents?

<sup>3</sup> A lesson from this for parents should be: Despite any other obligations you have or the troubles you face, spending time with your children needs to be given priority. The time spent together will allow you to inculcate the spiritual values that will safeguard the hearts of your children and set them on the right course. (Deuteronomy 6:4-9; Proverbs 4:23-27) Eunice and Lois, respectively the mother and the grandmother of Timothy, took the time to give him the instruction that touched his little heart and shaped his life so that he grew up to be a devoted servant of God.—2 Timothy 1:5; 3:15.

<sup>4</sup> Christian parents cannot afford to neglect the children that Jehovah God has granted to them. Yes, children are a precious gift from Jehovah. (Psalm 127:3) So spend time with them—reach their hearts—even as Timothy's mother and grandmother set the example. Not only should you spend time talking with your children about their conduct and disciplining them but you also need to eat meals with them, read with them, play with them, help them to get ready for bed at night. All this time spent with your children is vital.

<sup>5</sup> A prominent Japanese businessman who became one of Jehovah's Witnesses recognized this fact. Beneath the headline, "Top JNR Exec Quits To Be With Family," the Mainichi Daily News of February 10,

3. What lesson should parents learn from this incident?
4. How precious are children, and how should parents show that they appreciate them?
5. Give an example of one father who showed appreciation for his parental responsibilities.

1986, reported: "A top executive of the Japanese National Railways (JNR) chose resignation rather than separation from his family . . . Says Tamura, 'The job of the director general can be taken by anybody. But I am the only father of my children.'" Do you take your parental responsibilities as seriously?

Why Special Efforts Needed Now

<sup>6</sup> Probably never in human history has it been so difficult to rear children in the way God's Word instructs, "in the discipline and mental-regulating of Jehovah." (Ephesians 6:4) The reason for this is that we are living "in the last days," and Satan and his demons are causing great woe because they are angry, knowing they have only a short time left. (2 Timothy 3:1-5; Revelation 12:7-12) Thus, the efforts of parents to rear their children in a godly way are being thwarted by the symbolic "air" over which Satan exercises authority. That "air," or spirit of selfishness and disobedience, is as pervasive as the literal air we breathe.—Ephesians 2:2.

<sup>7</sup> Television, in particular, carries into the home this "spirit of the world," this poisonous "air." (1 Corinthians 2:12) Actually what appears on television is often strongly influenced by a powerful immoral and homosexual segment of the entertainment field. (Romans 1:24-32) Your children are especially susceptible to the ungodly thinking and moral filth presented, even as they are to literal air pollution. But what do many parents do?

<sup>8</sup> They use television as a baby-sitter. "Not now, honey. I'm busy. Go watch television," they tell their children. A

6. Why is it so hard to rear children properly today?
7. 8. (a) What can television bring into the home, and yet what do many parents do? (b) Why is using television as a baby-sitter a sad neglect of parental responsibility?

Parental training cannot start too early

prominent television broadcaster says that these are "the most often spoken words in many American households." And yet sending children off to watch whatever may be on television amounts, in effect, to letting them on the loose. (Proverbs 29:15) It constitutes a sad neglect of parental responsibility. As this broadcaster noted regarding raising children: "It is time consuming and a great responsibility this parenting business and it may not be delegat-ed, certainly not to the television set."

<sup>9</sup> However, because of the pressure of the times in which we live, you may be inclined, as the disciples were, to turn children aside so that you can attend to what may be thought of as more important business. But what is more important than your own children? Their spiritual lives are at stake! You may recall that when the Chernobyl nuclear accident occurred in the Soviet Union in 1986, children were removed from the region to protect them from the pollution. Similarly, if you are to guard the spiritual health of your children, you need to protect them from the world's poisonous "air," which is so often spewed out from the television set.—Proverbs 13:20.

<sup>10</sup> There are other sources of poisonous "air," however, that can destroy moral values and can harden young minds. Improper association with children in the neighborhood and at school can also crowd out Bible truths planted in tender hearts. (1 Corinthians 15:33) A lesson can be drawn from Jacob's young daughter Dinah, who "used to go out to see the daughters of the land" and, as a result, was violated by one of the young men. (Genesis 34:1, 2) Children need to be well instructed and trained to avoid the moral pitfalls of a world that is even more debased today than it was then.

Why Train From Infancy?

<sup>11</sup> But when should parental training begin? The Bible says that Timothy received his training "from infancy." (2 Timothy 3:15) Interestingly, bre'phos, the Greek word here, is often used of an unborn child, as at Luke 1:41, 44. There the infant John was said to leap within his mother's womb. But bre'phos is also used of the newborn Israelite babies whose lives were threatened in Egypt in the time Moses was born. (Acts 7:19, 20) In Timothy's case, the word clearly refers to a mere infant, or baby, and not simply to a young child. Timothy received instruction from the holy writings from as far back as his memory could reach, from the time when he was only a baby. And with what fine results! (Philippians 2:19-22) Yet, can newborn babies really benefit from such early teaching?

<sup>10.</sup> What other sources of poisonous "air" are a danger to children, and what Bible example illustrates this?

<sup>12</sup> "One of the most exciting developments in the whole field of psychology is our new understanding of the great ability of the infant to learn," reported Dr. Edward Zigler, a professor at Yale University, in 1984. In fact, the magazine Health says: "Babies still in the womb may be able to see, hear, taste—and 'feel' emotions, new research suggests." Evidently, parents can never start too early to instruct their children. (Deuteronomy 31:12) They can start by showing their children pictures from books and sharing stories with them. "The crucial years," says Masaru Ibuka, author of the book Kindergarten Is Too Late, "are the years from birth to three." This is because the young mind is especially malleable, absorbing information more easily, as is evidenced by an infant's quick mastery of a new language. A professor in early childhood education at New York University even said that "parents should begin teaching kids to read the moment they bring them home from the hospital!"

<sup>13</sup> A mother from Canada writes regarding her child's ability to learn: "One day I was reading a story from My Book of Bible Stories to my four-and-a-half-year-old son, Shaun. As I paused at one point, I found to my amazement that he began to continue the story, word for word, as it appears in the Bible Stories book. . . . I tried another and then another, and he had memorized every one. . . . He has actually memorized, word for word, the first 33 stories, including difficult names of places and people."*

13. What illustrates the ability of infants to learn?

<sup>14</sup> Those well acquainted with the potential of infants to learn are not surprised by such feats. "The world could be full of intellectual giants like Einstein, Shakespeare, Beethoven and Leonardo da Vinci if we taught babies instead of children," claims Dr. Glenn Doman, director of The Institutes for the Achievement of Human Potential. Of course, the goal of Christian parents is not to produce intellectual giants but to reach the hearts of their children so that the children never depart from serving God. (Proverbs 22:6) Such efforts need to be made long before the child enters school, in order to prepare him for the tests he will face there. Kindergarten or day-care programs, for instance, feature birthday and holiday parties that can be fun for children. So the child needs to understand why Jehovah's servants do not participate. Otherwise he may grow to hate his parents' religion.

How to Reach a Child's Heart

<sup>15</sup> To help parents reach their child's heart, publications such as Listening to the Great Teacher have been provided by Jehovah's Witnesses. This book talks about parties and how "they can be lots of fun" in its chapter "Two Men Who Celebrated Birthdays." Yet the chapter explains that the only two birthday parties mentioned in the Bible were celebrated by pagans, who did not worship Jehovah, and that at each party ‘someone’s head was chopped off.’ (Mark 6:17-29; Genesis 40:20-22) How can you use this information to reach your child’s heart?

<sup>16</sup> You can employ the appealing method of the Great Teacher book by saying: “Now, we know that everything that is in the Bible is there for a reason.” Then ask: “So, what would you say that God is telling us about birthday parties?” Your child is thus helped to reason on the matter and reach right conclusions. Besides the Great Teacher book, other literature has been provided for use by parents, including My Book of Bible Stories and the serial “Jesus’ Life and Ministry” that has appeared in each issue of The Watchtower since April 1985. Have you been using these articles in teaching your children as well as yourself?

<sup>17</sup> With your child, you need to go over and over material that covers issues and situations that he will face in school. Let your child know that both of you are accountable to Jehovah. (Romans 14:12) Highlight the good things Jehovah does for us, thus moving the child’s little heart to want to please Jehovah. (Acts 14:17) Make learning sessions a happy time. Children love stories, so really work at imparting instruction in an animated way that will reach your child’s heart. Many families miss a marvelous opportunity for such sessions by failing to have meals together regularly. Do you eat together as a family? If not, can you correct the situation? —Compare Acts 2:42, 46, 47.

<sup>18</sup> The learning session should be adjusted to the child’s age. So with an infant, whose attention span is limited, have a number of short daily sessions. Then, progressively, make them longer and expand their content. The importance of having regular periods for teaching your children simply cannot be overemphasized. (Genesis 18:19; Deuteronomy 11:18-21) One father, now in his seventies, set a fine example in rearing his son, who now is a Christian elder. Years ago he described his program, explaining:

18, 19. (a) How should parents schedule the teaching of their children, and what cannot be overemphasized?

(b) What features of a modern example of parental training impress you, and what do you believe would result if a parent employed them?

<sup>19</sup> "When our boy was about one I began telling him bedtime Bible stories, related in an enlarged, colorful way to make a vivid impression. As soon as he began to talk in his second year we would kneel by his bedside and I would have him repeat after me, phrase by phrase, the 'Lord's Prayer.' . . . When he was three I began to have a regular Bible study with him . . . He would follow in his book, verbally repeating the words after me. He thus came to pronounce words well and learned to enunciate clearly even the big words. . . . To aid in making Bible truths sink deeply into his heart, when he was three we began to have him memorize simple Bible texts. By the time he entered kindergarten he knew about thirty texts, and last September when he started the first grade he had memorized seventy scriptures. . . . Before our boy goes to bed I have him repeat some of his scriptures. Likewise when he gets up in the morning he often recites a few Bible texts as part of his greetings for the day."

<sup>20</sup> Such a progressive teaching program, including proper parental example and the application of consistent discipline, will provide your child with a start in life for which he will be forever grateful. (Proverbs 22:15; 23:13, 14) A vital part of the program should be training in the public ministry from an early age. Make it a pleasant experience by preparing your child to have a meaningful share. The father mentioned above further commented regarding his son: "His ability to quote scriptures makes him very effective in the house-to-house ministry, since many householders are amazed and cannot resist the offer of Bible magazines he presents. He has shared in this Christian service since he was three years old, and is now [at age 6] often more effective in placing Bible literature with people than my wife and I."—Awake!, January 22, 1965, pages 3-4.

<sup>21</sup> Truly, Christian parents have a marvelous inheritance, a knowledge of Jehovah, to leave their children and with it the prospects of unending life, peace, and happiness in a glorious new world. (Proverbs 3:1-6, 13-18; 13:22) Above all else, in your little ones' hearts build confidence in the reality of that grand future, along with a desire to serve Jehovah. Make true worship a natural and happy experience for them. (1 Timothy 1:11) Inculcate trust in Jehovah from infancy. And never, no, never, neglect regular learning sessions with them! Give these your highest priority, continually reexamining what information your children need and how you can best reach their hearts with it. You are busy and under pressure; Satan and his world see to that. But remember Jesus' example! Never be too busy to have a regular study with your children!

Guard Against Leading a Double Life

"Rejoice, young man, in your youth . . . But know that on account of all these the true God will bring you into judgment."—ECCLESIASTES 11:9.

FROM infancy I was brought up in a Christian environment, among Jehovah's Witnesses," wrote a youth. "Still, the life I lived, even while at home, was the complete opposite of the standards and thinking of my parents. My life for the most part was a loose life, an undisciplined life of the world."

1, 2. What example is there of a youth leading a double life?

<sup>2</sup> The youth further explained: "Even before I reached the age of ten, I started playing both worlds as best I could—to get acceptance and friendship at school and still be accepted by my parents. At school I conformed as much as I could in style and conduct . . . But at home I was completely different. I was the well-behaved Christian my parents expected."

<sup>3</sup> We realize that this youth's conduct is not representative of most of you young ones in the congregation. The majority of you, we are confident, are honest with your parents and the congregation, and this warms our hearts. At the same time, we know that some put on a front of being upright, and as best they can, they conceal from older ones a course of wrongdoing. Hence the question: Are you the kind of person that you make us think you are, or are you leading a double life? We do not ask this in a spirit of finding fault but, rather, because we truly love you and want to help you to enjoy your youth by living it in a way that will please Jehovah.—Ecclesiastes 11:9, 10; 12:14; 2 Corinthians 5:10.

<sup>4</sup> Still, you may ask: 'Why pick on us young ones? What about adults?' There is no question that they also must guard against leading a double life. Gehazi, the attendant of Elisha, acted deceptively, trying to cover up the fact that he accepted gifts from Naaman. (2 Kings 5:20-26) And Ananias and Sapphira, who were adults, played false by saying that they had given to the apostles the entire price of the field—trying to make themselves look good—when actually they held back some of the money for themselves. (Acts 5:1-4) The reason, however, we are directing attention to you young ones is that there has apparently been an increase in the incidence of this problem among you.

Why Some Lead a Double Life

<sup>5</sup> Why is this? One youth pinpointed a major reason, explaining: "I didn't want to lose my friends by being different." It is true that being different in a wholesome way often makes one the brunt of ridicule. (Compare 1 Peter 3:16; 4:4.) To avoid this and to gain the acceptance of their peers, some youths will even get drunk or have sex relations. A 13-year-old non-Witness girl, who earned all A's and always participated in class discussions, lamented: "Guys will never be interested in someone as predictably good as me. . . . I'm considering letting my grades slip or something to liven up my reputation."

3. (a) What confidence do we have, yet what do we realize? (b) What prompts our directing attention to youths?
4. How have some adults also led double lives, but what has been noted recently among young people?
5. (a) Why do some youths lead a double life? (b) How are youths often treated when they live commendable lives, and so what do some do?

<sup>6</sup> Significantly, the apostle Peter himself once thought more of his image, or reputation, than of doing what he knew was right. When Jewish Christians from Jerusalem visited Antioch, Peter withdrew from association with the Gentile Christians because of fear of criticism by the Jews for mingling with these Gentiles. (Galatians 2:11-14) Since even mature Christians have thus succumbed to peer pressure, is it any wonder that inexperienced youths might do so too?—Proverbs 22:15.

<sup>7</sup> A related reason why some young ones lead a double life is that they believe they are missing out on fun. They hear youngsters at school talk about their activities—how great the party was, the terrific music, the drinking, the drugs, what a great high they had! Or they hear how he, or she, can kiss and make love. So a desire to experience these things is aroused, and the young ones are influenced to try out what the Bible calls "the temporary enjoyment of sin."—Hebrews 11:24, 25; 1 Corinthians 10:6-8.

<sup>8</sup> However, the fundamental reason some youths lead a double life is that Jehovah

7. What may tempt some youths to lead a double life?
8. What is the basic reason youths lead double lives?

and the coming new world simply are not real to them. They do not truly believe Jehovah's promises or the warnings issued through his Word and his visible organization regarding the consequences of disobeying Jehovah. (Galatians 6:7, 8) They are unlike Moses, of whom the Bible says: "He looked intently toward the payment of [God's] reward. . . . He continued steadfast as seeing the One who is invisible." To Moses, Jehovah and His promises were real. But those who lead a double life lack that faith. All they see is what Satan wants them to see—the glitter of his system. And so they go after the temporary enjoyment of sin and yet, at the same time, try to put on a front of holiness.—Hebrews 11:26, 27.

Parents, You Can Contribute

<sup>9</sup> The youth quoted at the outset observed: "What made me unpopular at school brought acceptance and a smile of approval at home. But I needed more than that. I needed someone I could hold on to, talk to, and confide in, and I wasn't getting that from my parents." Parents, are you being careful not to contribute to your children's leading a double life? Are you providing them with the personal attention and guidance they need? Older ones must appreciate the tremendous, faith-undermining pressures that our young ones face in school and be alert to do everything possible to encourage and help them.—Psalm 73:2, 3; Hebrews 12:3, 12, 13.

<sup>10</sup> Often a youth's questions revolve around relationships with members of the opposite sex, a subject that, unfortunately, many parents avoid. "They never had a heart-to-heart talk with me," related a pretty 15-year-old honor student. "Everything I learned about sex I had to learn on my own. . . . I was too ashamed to bring it up although there were so many things I wanted to know." What was the result? She said: "The invisible wall grew thicker between my parents and me, and I became a very curious, foolish and susceptible girl." Yes, she succumbed to the sexual advances of a young man, but who would you say shared responsibility for this?—Proverbs 22:3; 27:12.

<sup>11</sup> It is vital that parents show their youngsters that they truly love them by

11. (a) How can parents show that they love their children? (b) How are youths likely to respond to such love?

Talking confidentially demonstrates the parent's love spending time with them, sharing in confidential talk, and providing guidelines. (Proverbs 15:22; 20:18) "I have the feeling if they really cared about me they would make some rules," observed another youth. Even if young ones resent your rules and regulations now, later they will look back on them with appreciation. A youth wrote her mother: "As one who was constantly testing the boundaries, looking for soft spots and ways to escape the tough rules and regulations, I am ever so grateful you kept a tight rein on me." So show that you love your children by requiring that they comply with your guidelines. May you never contribute to their leading a double life by failing to keep open the lines of communication or by failing to be there when they need you!

<sup>12</sup> Parents can also contribute in quite a different way to their children's leading a double life. The remarks of a New Jersey state superior court judge illustrate. "Teachers," the judge said, "try to discipline children for wrongdoing in school and then are upbraided by parents instead of being supported." It seems some parents mistakenly believe that their youngsters can do no wrong. Even when Christian elders or other responsible ones in the congregation bring the wrongdoing of their children to their attention, the parents turn a deaf ear. By so doing, they contribute to the duplicity of their young ones.

What a Double Life Really Is

<sup>13</sup> This is vital to consider: Leading a double life really amounts to playing false—being an impostor, a hypocrite. (Psalm 12:2; 2 Timothy 3:13) It is being like Satan, who "keeps transforming himself into an angel of light." (2 Corinthians 11:

12. What unwise attitude of some parents contributes to their children's leading a double life?
13. Leading a double life really amounts to what?

14, 15) It also means being like those religious leaders of whom Jesus said: "Woe to you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! because you resemble whitewashed graves, which outwardly indeed appear beautiful but inside are full of dead men's bones and of every sort of uncleanness. In that way you also, outwardly indeed, appear righteous to men, but inside you are full of hypocrisy and lawlessness." (Matthew 23: 27, 28) Clearly, leading a double life is a serious offense against God.

<sup>14</sup> Another fact for serious consideration is this: A hypocritical course cannot be concealed indefinitely. "Even by his practices a boy makes himself recognized as to whether his activity is pure and upright," the Bible says. (Proverbs 20:11; Luke 12: 1-3) Yes, your activity, whether good or bad, will eventually become known. And the Bible shows that God will punish hypocrites with severity. (Matthew 24:51) Surely you should want to avoid leading a double life!

How to Avoid It

<sup>15</sup> One way to avoid leading a double life is to face up to what it really amounts to and then ask yourself: Is that how I want to be remembered, as a hypocrite, as an imitator of Satan and the Pharisees? Of course not! Something else that will help you avoid leading a double life is to think of the personal heartache and tragedy such a life will bring you. Recall what happened to Gehazi for trying to live a lie. Naaman's leprosy stuck to him, and he was a leper for the rest of his life. And Ananias and Sapphira were both struck dead by God for trying to put on a pretense of generosity. —2 Kings 5:27; Acts 5:5, 9, 10.

14. Why should one want to avoid leading a double life?
15. What will help youths avoid leading a double life?

If you are aware that another has committed a serious offense, encourage that one to report it

<sup>16</sup> There are also modern examples. A youth in the United States had begun to study the Bible and attend meetings at the Kingdom Hall. But then he began dabbling in a worldly life-style and discontinued association. Years passed, and he wrote: "About two months ago I asked God to send me a Witness because I felt the desire to start over again. I started to study again when the bomb exploded. I was diagnosed a month ago as having Kaposi's sarcoma, part of the new incurable AIDS syndrome." He concluded: "If I had only followed and obeyed Scriptural warnings back then, I would not be in this situation today." Surely you want to avoid any such sad consequences! The world really has nothing of value to offer.—1 John 2:15-17.

16. What happened to one youth who got involved in a worldly life-style?

<sup>17</sup> What will also help you avoid leading a double life is to consider the effect that doing so will have on Jehovah's name. The youth mentioned in the introduction said that someone who saw him accept a cigarette commented: "I didn't know Jehovah's Witnesses could smoke. Aren't you a Witness?" He later said that the question made him feel terrible because what he was doing was bringing reproach on Jehovah. Do you want that? Do you think so little of our God that like unfaithful Israel of old you will bring shame upon his name?—Psalm 78:36, 37, 41; Ezekiel 36:22.

<sup>18</sup> Besides, consider the name and the feelings of your parents. "The day came when my parents learned what I really was," wrote the above-mentioned youth. "It shocked them. And for the first time in my life I saw my mother and father cry. They were so hurt by what I had done." Your parents would probably cry, too, if they learned you were leading a double life. Is that what you want? "A good name is more desirable than great wealth," the Bible says. (Proverbs 22:1, The Jerusalem Bible) By leading a double life, you destroy your own good name. But that is not all. You also spoil the good name of your parents and drag it in the mud, causing them humiliation and embarrassment.—Proverbs 10:1; 17:21.

ed, her brothers slaughtered the men of the city and then plundered the city, causing Jacob to lament: "You have brought ostracism upon me in making me a stench to the inhabitants of the land." God even directed Jacob to leave the area. (Genesis 34:30; 35:1) You too can cause the name of your father and mother to stink, making them ashamed to face even their neighbors and friends. Indeed, as the Bible says: "A stupid son is a vexation to his father and a bitterness to her that gave him birth." —Proverbs 17:25.

<sup>20</sup> We are confident, however, that you do not want your parents to suffer vexation and bitterness. So consider the effects of your actions upon them. Also, if you are privileged to have Christian parents, think of what they have given you—not just life—but something more precious. The Bible says of Jehovah: "Your loving-kindness is better than life." (Psalm 63:3) By rearing you in the truth, your parents have made God's loving-kindness available to you, helping you to have a relationship with him. Having this is better than having life itself because even if you should die, God will restore you to eternal life in Paradise.

Help Others Avoid It

<sup>21</sup> What if you know of someone who is leading a double life? First, encourage the person to approach the elders. And what if he or she refuses to do that? Then it is your Scriptural responsibility to report it. (Leviticus 5:1) We realize this may not be easy, but it is the right thing to do. "The wounds inflicted by a lover are faithful," the Bible says. (Proverbs 27:6) A 13-year-old girl, after hearing a talk explaining her Scriptural responsibility, went to a friend that she knew was engaging in wrongdoing and told her she should confess to the elders. "I went and checked to see if she had talked to any elder," the girl writes. "She hadn't. So I went and talked to one of them." The young girl asked: "Did I do the right thing by turning in my 'ex-best friend'?" Of course she did! While the immediate consequences of doing this may be grievous, the result afterward can be joyous, even lifesaving to the wrongdoer. —Hebrews 12:11.

<sup>22</sup> Yet all of this can be avoided if you do not lead a double life in the first place. So be wise. Develop a strong personal relationship with God, as you would with a close friend. Do this by regularly praying to him, by asking for his help, and by diligently studying his Word, the Bible, so that you truly come to appreciate his qualities. Youths, you will then be blessed and will make the heart of your parents glad. But even more important, you will make the heart of Jehovah glad.—Proverbs 27:11.

Kingdom Proclaimers Report

Experiences From Tuvalu

THE good news of the Kingdom is being proclaimed in the beautiful islands of Tuvalu, in the South Pacific, and a good witness has been given even to men in high station. An Australian brother who with his wife is serving in the traveling work in Tuvalu tells us of his experience:

"My wife and I were invited to attend a meal at the home of the Prime Minister of Tuvalu. The occasion was the visit of Australia's Minister for Foreign Affairs. During the course of the meal, my wife and I had a fine opportunity to witness to both the Australian minister and his wife. When introducing us, the Prime Minister mentioned what a wonderful work Jehovah's Witnesses are doing in Tuvalu, particularly with regard to the translation of our literature into the Tuvaluan language. 'I have copies of all their publications in my library, and they are excellent!' he said. Both the minister and his wife were interested to hear of the progress of our work in Tuvalu.

"Later in the evening, we attended some local entertainment of traditional dancing. Afterward the Governor General of Tuvalu approached us and mentioned that some Witnesses had visited his residence the week before and had left some copies of the Watchtower and Awake! magazines. He noticed on the back of one of the magazines an advertisement for the New World Translation of the Holy Scriptures and wanted to know how he could get one locally. We stated that we would gladly give him a copy. The next Sunday, I went up to his residence with the Bible, and we had a fine discussion for about an hour. He mentioned how much he appreciated our work and publications. In fact, when we arrived at his home, his wife was reading the Live Forever book in Tuvaluan. So we were happy to be able to witness to some 'who are in high station.'—1 Timothy 2:1-4.

On another occasion the Prime Minister of Tuvalu visited the Solomon Islands. The community of Tuvaluans who live there hosted a feast in his honor. Among those invited to the feast was one sister, who reported the following experience:

"At the conclusion of the feast, the Prime Minister allowed an opportunity to ask questions about the latest developments in Tuvalu. One question asked was, 'Are there any new religions in Tuvalu?' The Prime Minister replied that 'there are some new religions that have been allowed into Tuvalu but only one good one.' When asked which one that was, he replied, 'Jehovah's Witnesses.'

"Everyone was surprised by his answer, and the obvious question arose as to why Jehovah's Witnesses are the 'only good religion.' He stated: 'Because our pastors sit at home all day and only ring a bell on Sundays for us to go up and listen to them. But Jehovah's Witnesses actually come to you, and even though you may not go to church, they will teach you about the Bible in your own home.'"

So, although some would criticize our door-to-door ministry, obviously others appreciate our taking the message to their very homes.—Acts 5:42.

'The Measuring Lines Have Fallen for Me in Pleasant Places'

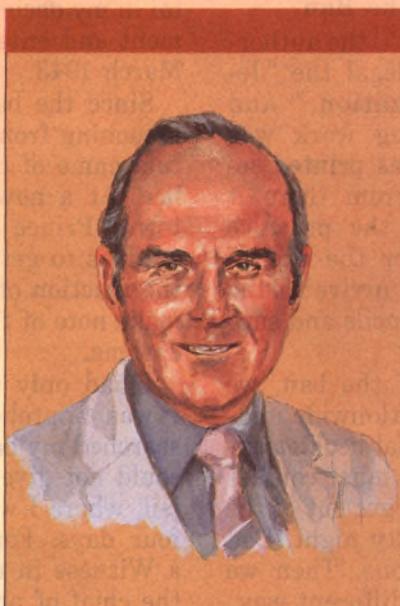

As told by D. H. MacLean

THREE I sat, hour after hour, with one of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police by my side. I was his prisoner. We were headed for the prison camp at Chalk River, Ontario, Canada, and it seemed the 1,500-mile train trip would never end.

It was 1944, and World War II was at its height. But what was I doing here headed for prison? Well, it was largely because of what Dad had taught me from childhood on. He would usually end any serious discussion with me by applying to his own life the psalmist's words: "The measuring lines themselves have fallen for me in pleasant places." Then he would urge me to strive for the same experience.—Psalm 16:6.

A Spiritual Upbringing

The things Dad had seen while serving for four years as a sergeant during World War I, especially what he had seen of the clergy's hypocritical conduct, disillusioned him. So, in 1920, when an enthusiastic Bible Student explained God's solution to world problems, the Bible truths struck a responsive chord in Dad's heart. Mother also took an interest and became a devoted servant of Jehovah. Hence, my sister Kay and I had the advantage of a spiritual upbringing.

In time, Dad sold his business, and he and Mom began traveling from town to town in the full-time preaching work. Thus, during the 1928 school year, when I was six and Kay was eight, we were enrolled in eight different schools! We continued this itinerant life-style for the next 18 months. But when it became increasingly difficult to give proper attention to our education, my parents bought a filling station and garage to which was attached a small confectionary store. Nevertheless, those 18 months of pioneering left a lasting impression on my sister and me.

Our home near Halifax, Nova Scotia, was always an open house for pioneers and traveling overseers. Dad was generous and helpful to those needing car repairs or spare parts, while Mother cared for the domestic needs of our many visitors. I have vivid memories of the faith-strengthening experiences told by those full-time workers. I can also remember the time when I was 18 years old and one of the traveling brothers invited me to accompany him for three weeks as he visited nearby congregations. That unexpected privilege has remained engraved on my mind.

Excitement During the Ban

In 1940, when I was only 17, the authorities in Canada declared illegal the "Jehovah's Witness Organization," and the Witnesses' evangelizing work was banned. The Watchtower was printed secretly in our house, and from there it was circulated throughout the province of Nova Scotia. I remember the excitement when a courier would arrive in the middle of the night with stencils and supplies of paper and ink.

During the early part of the ban, we shared as a family in the nationwide midnight distribution of a special booklet entitled End of Nazism. But I must confess my heart was pounding as I got out of the car in the black of that frosty night. Dad gave hurried, clear directions. Then we separated and each went a different way.

You can imagine our concern when Kay did not return to the car at the time we had agreed upon. After waiting for more than an hour, there was nothing we could do but go home. To our great relief, she was there, anxiously waiting for us. She had been picked up by the police but not for distributing illegal literature. A policeman had spotted her and wondered why an attractive teenage girl was walking alone on the streets of Halifax in the early hours of a cold winter morning. So when he offered to drive her home, Kay accepted—all her booklets had been distributed anyway. The campaign was a great success and gained publicity throughout Canada.

How I Came to Be a Prisoner

After finishing high school in 1941, I worked secularly for nearly two years. Then I attended a district convention in the United States, where I met Milton Bartlett, a zealous pioneer of my own age. His exuberance for the truth and obvious joy in pioneering were largely instrumental in my decision to leave secular employment and enter the full-time ministry in March 1943.

Since the ban was still in force, Bible preaching from house to house was a virtual game of cat and mouse with the police. At a new assignment in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, I was so anxious to get out in the ministry to see the reaction of the people that I forgot to make note of the address of my accommodations.

I had only visited a few homes when I was apprehended by the police, who searched my bag and arrested me. Since I could not give an address, I ended up in jail, where I was held incommunicado for four days. Fortunately, the daughter of a Witness in the congregation overheard the chief of police speak of a young Witness they were holding, and this led to my being bailed out by the brothers.

My trial was postponed for several months, and so I continued the door-to-door ministry. Then I was given another assignment, to Glace Bay, Nova Scotia. A few months later, I received a summons to appear in court back in Charlottetown. I prepared diligently for my trial, hoping to present strong proof of my ministry.

The judge was satisfied that I met all the qualifications of a minister of religion. He added, however, that it was the custom to send Jehovah's Witnesses to prison camps in harmony with national service regulations. This is how I came to be on that train to the prison camp at Chalk River, Ontario. During the next two years, I was sent to three different camps.

Freedom—But More Battles

I was released in 1946 and resumed pioneering at Glace Bay. With the ban on Jehovah's Witnesses lifted, we were again free to do our work in Canada with legal protection. The one exception was the French-speaking Catholic province of Quebec, where religious persecution was great. Thus began what came to be called the Battle of Quebec.

On Sunday, November 3, 1946, a special meeting was arranged in Montreal, attended by the Watch Tower Society's president and others from the Brooklyn headquarters. The fiery tract Quebec's Burning Hate for God and Christ and Freedom Is the Shame of All Canada was released, and a program for nationwide distribution was outlined. Pioneers were invited to apply for the next class of Gilead to receive training to equip them to follow up on this special campaign in Quebec. I applied and within a few months received an invitation to the ninth class of Gilead.

Life in a New Land

Since I felt groomed for Quebec, I was taken completely by surprise when, after graduation, I was assigned as circuit overseer in Ontario, Canada, to visit the English-speaking congregations there. Yet this was nothing compared with the shock that came six months later when I was handed a letter from the Society that contained an assignment to Australia.

There in that new land, my first assignment was to serve a circuit covering the entire state of Western Australia, an enormous area of 975,900 square miles!

Another early circuit I served in the central part of Australia included a remote outpost called William Creek. The only Witness there operated a lone provision store at the railroad stop. One day I was amazed to see a caravan of camels ridden by Australian Aborigines slowly pull up near the store. They had come to buy supplies. The conversation went like this:

Customer: Want boots.

Storekeeper: Big or little?

Customer: Big.

With that, the transaction was completed, and the customer trundled out of the store to load his new boots on his camel. Another came in.

Customer: I want dress for lubra (Aboriginal word for wife).

Storekeeper: Big or skinny?

Customer: Skinny.

The dress was produced, paid for, and popped into a bag to be loaded on the waiting camel.

With a Marriage Mate

Three years after arriving in Australia, I married a pretty girl from Brisbane, named June Dobson. After our marriage, we pioneered for one year before being invited back into the traveling work, first in the circuit work and later in the district work.

When I was single, I served many outback areas on a motorcycle. However, now my wife and I traveled by car. The road across the rugged Nullarbor Plain, where temperatures commonly rise above 115 degrees Fahrenheit, was unpaved for some 750 miles and consisted of fine dust. It would spray out, so that the car resembled a speedboat plowing through water. We carefully sealed all doors and windows with masking tape to keep out the insidious bulldust. This caused the temperature inside the car to rise dramatically, but at least it saved us from being covered with grime and dust.

During our years in the district work, we crisscrossed the Australian continent time and again, visiting scores of towns and cities and serving circuit assemblies in every possible setting. When we began in the district work in 1953, there was just one district in Australia. Now there are five.

In 1960 an unexpected invitation came for us—to serve at Sydney Bethel in Strathfield. The contrast to the traveling work was great, but eventually I became accustomed to desk work. Soon, however, we were in for yet another surprise. After serving at Bethel for 18 months, June and I received an invitation to attend the new 10-month course of Gilead School.

In contrast with my previous Gilead schooling at South Lansing, New York, this time we were right in Brooklyn at the world headquarters of Jehovah's Witnesses. On graduating, we were assigned back to Australia, once again to the traveling work. We served in that capacity until 1981, when we were invited back to Sydney Bethel. There we were able to share in the massive task of moving the entire branch office, factory, and Bethel family from Strathfield to the newly constructed facilities at Ingleburn, about 30 miles from the center of Sydney.

"In Pleasant Places"

Here my work on the service desk is a daily delight. Knowing personally so many brothers and sisters from all over the continent because of years in the district work, I have the feeling of being there with the circuit overseers as their reports come in each week. District overseers' reports transport me right into the auditoriums and Assembly Halls with all the atmosphere of a circuit assembly. With a Bethel family of more than 110, located in a semirural area well removed from the noise and pollution of the city, my wife and I feel that life at Bethel is the ultimate of "pleasant places."

One late autumn day in May 1984, the Branch Committee coordinator, H. V. Mouritz, quietly told me that I had received an appointment from the Governing Body to serve as a member of the Australia Branch Committee. My feeling that afternoon was much the same as in 1947 when I read the letter assigning me to serve in this delightful land down under.

To review my 65 years of life in Jehovah's organization is to feel a personal fulfillment of Psalm 16:6. Indeed, "the measuring lines" have fallen for me in very "pleasant places." If I had to replan my life, I would without hesitation choose precisely the course I have taken. There could be no more pleasant outcome—no more rewarding experience.

GOD'S UNDESERVED KINDNESS Do Not Miss Its Purpose!

TALKING about religion . . . is really the pastor's job," stated one church member. (Italics ours.) Others have admitted, "Relatively few Christians make an effort to share their faith with others." (Italics ours.) Such statements clearly emphasize that for the majority of today's churchgoers, Christianity amounts to little more than a passive belief in God and in Christ as the Messiah.

What is your view? The disciples of Jesus shared their faith with others. (Luke 8:1) Should Christians today do the same? Or if God no longer requires professed Christians to be evangelizers, what does he expect of them? Does God have a purpose for Christians today? Yes! And for this reason, the apostle Paul's warning to the Corinthian Christians not to "accept the undeserved kindness of God and miss its purpose" has meaning for us. (2 Corinthians 6:1) Let us see why.

God's Purpose Identified

Like Paul, the Corinthian Christians had accepted the ransom sacrifice of Jesus Christ. Because of their faith in this provision, Jehovah declared them righteous. Their acceptance of the Messianic truths received through Paul's ministry delivered them from enslavement to the false, pagan, and immoral practices for which ancient Corinth was notorious. For them, Jehovah's undeserved kindness meant their deliverance. However, was such undeserved kindness without purpose?

No. Rather, Jehovah's purpose in delivering them was the same as his purpose had been in delivering Paul from the unscriptural traditions of Paul's fathers. Paul himself makes that purpose plain: "I became a minister of this according to the free gift of the undeserved kindness of God that was given me . . . that I should declare to the nations the good news about the unfathomable riches of the Christ." (Ephesians 3:7, 8; compare Galatians 1:15, 16.) Yes, the purpose of God's undeserved kindness was that his servants should take up true worship—exalting his name, Jehovah, and making it known in the Christian ministry, just as Paul did.—Romans 10:10.

However, when Paul wrote his first letter to the Corinthians, it was apparent that many of them had missed the purpose of God's undeserved kindness. How so? Instead of maintaining a form of worship that was clean and acceptable in the sight of God, they had allowed the immoral influence of the inhabitants of Corinth to dull their senses. Both dissensions and fornication had been reported among them. (1 Corinthians 1:11; 5:1, 2) The majority of those associated with the congregation were readjusted by Paul's counsel. Nevertheless, Paul did not want them to have any more distractions from the Christian ministry. Hence, he later reminded them not to "accept the undeserved kindness of God and miss its purpose."—2 Corinthians 6:1.

An Ancient Example

A situation similar to this had developed centuries earlier. In the spring of 537 B.C.E., Jehovah God released his chosen nation of Israel from Babylonian captivity by means of the Persian king Cyrus. The purpose of their deliverance was identified by Cyrus himself in the following decree: "Whoever there is among you of all his people, may his God prove to be with him. So let him go up to Jerusalem, which is in Judah, and rebuild the house of Jehovah the God of Israel."—Ezra 1:1-3.

Yes, it was Jehovah's appointed time to have true worship restored to the land of Judah. Because of Jehovah's undeserved kindness, those repatriated Jews had the privilege of rebuilding his temple in Jerusalem. Accepting the challenge, the returned exiles got settled in their homeland and began restoration work on the temple.—Ezra 1:5-11.

Within a short time, however, this returned Jewish nation allowed outside opposition to interfere with their work. Rather than keep clearly fixed in mind the purpose of their deliverance, they began to say: "The time has not come, the time of the house of Jehovah, for it to be built." (Haggai 1:2) As a result, the rebuilding work was left entirely for about 16 years.

In the meantime, they were occupied with selfish pursuits, putting more emphasis on material things, fleshly comforts, than on the rebuilding of the sacred house of Jehovah. (Haggai 1:3-9) At Haggai 1:4 we read: "Is it the time for you yourselves to dwell in your paneled houses, while this house is waste?" Jehovah's house of worship was lying "waste," with just a foundation, while the Jews were living in their well-roofed houses with their walls nicely paneled with fine wood.

Through his prophets Haggai and Zechariah, Jehovah reminded the Jews of the purpose of their deliverance, and the rebuilding work was eventually completed. However, any who continued to hold material possessions in higher esteem than the privilege of seeing true worship restored in Jerusalem clearly missed the purpose of God's undeserved kindness.

Purpose of Our Deliverance

What can we learn today from the example of the Jews repatriated in 537 B.C.E. and from the Corinthian Christians of Paul's day? As dedicated servants of Jehovah God, we also have experienced a deliverance. Through his undeserved kindness, no longer are we enslaved to the false doctrines and traditions of Babylon the Great or to the wickedness of this old system of things. (John

■ Maintaining Our Christian Oneness

8:32; 2 Corinthians 4:4-6) Such deliverance, as well as the freedom it brings, affords us the opportunity to show God our appreciation for his love for us. (1 John 4:9) How?

By our not missing the purpose of God's undeserved kindness. This is the same as it was for those earlier servants of Jehovah, that we should take up true worship. Today, as in Paul's day, this means that we should "declare to the nations the good news about the . . . Christ." (Ephesians 3:8) All, therefore, who accept the undeserved kindness of God must share in the Christian ministry. This means that as dedicated servants of Jehovah God, we have a responsibility to make the truth manifest to others, to magnify and praise God's name, and to serve him in worship that is clean and holy.—Matthew 28:19, 20; Hebrews 13:15; James 1:27.

'Do Not Miss Its Purpose'

Is it possible that any one of us, like those early Christians, is in danger of 'missing the purpose' of God's undeserved kindness? Yes. Like them, many of us, at work or at school, must rub shoulders with individuals who practice sexual immorality, thievery, lying, and cheating, as well as other things that are detestable to Jehovah God. (1 Corinthians 6:9, 10; Galatians 5:19-21) So it is vital that we avoid associating with such persons, lest we begin to develop a taste for what is bad. (1 Corinthians 15:33) Such associations can only have a debilitating effect on our faith. Appropriately, Paul wrote Titus: "For the undeserved kindness of God which brings salvation to all sorts of men has been manifested, instructing us to repudiate ungodliness and worldly desires and to live with soundness of mind and righteousness and godly devotion amid this present system of things."—Titus 2:11, 12.

Some may conclude that they are fulfilling their ministry if they attend the meetings at the Kingdom Hall, share regularly in proclaiming the good news of God's Kingdom, and are not engaged in any kind of immoral conduct. However, there is another factor to consider. Jesus said: "No one can slave for two masters." (Matthew 6:24) What did he mean? That even though we devote a measure of our time to the advancement of the good news, it is possible for our main interest in life to be that of striving after more and more material things. True, we may find the prospect of a new system of things under Christ Jesus to be genuinely appealing, yet at the same time we may want to get the most out of this system while it lasts. Such an attitude can only sidetrack us from the real purpose of our deliverance. Was it not a similar attitude toward material pursuits that sidetracked the repatriated Jews from fulfilling the purpose of their deliverance?

Do our works show that we have missed the purpose of our deliverance from this wicked old system and its false religion? Paul told the Corinthians that "now is the especially acceptable time" to help others to gain salvation. (2 Corinthians 6:2) Today, with the impending destruction of this wicked system close at hand, there is much greater urgency to Paul's words. While it is apparent that the majority of today's churchgoers choose not to share their faith with others, Christians manifesting a heartfelt love for Jehovah God will count it a privilege to share fully in the Christian ministry he has assigned them. All those who faithfully declare the good news in this acceptable time and serve Jehovah in worship that is clean and holy can do so with the assurance that they have 'accepted the undeserved kindness of God and have not missed its purpose.'—2 Corinthians 6:1.

God's Name and Bible Translators

IN 1952, The Bible Translator published a discussion of the "problem" of representing God's name in Bible translations to be used in Christendom's mission fields. Contributors recognized the importance of the name in the Bible—which name appears in the Hebrew Scriptures nearly 7,000 times. But they could not agree on how it should be rendered in modern languages. Some favored a term such as "The Eternal." Others opted for the title "Lord." None recommended the rendering "Jehovah" or "Yahweh." Why not?

Two reasons were mentioned by contributor H. Rosin. First, he believed that when the Hebrew Bible was originally translated into Greek (the pre-Christian Septuagint version) the translators rendered God's name by the Greek word for "Lord." Second, he feared that introducing the name Jehovah into translations "might also rend apart the church." For, he added, "are not 'Jehovah's witnesses' anti-Trinitarians?"

Regarding Rosin's first point, archaeological discoveries have proved him wrong. In fact, the translators of the Septuagint did not represent the divine name by the Greek word for "Lord." Rather, they wrote it out in its original Hebrew characters right in the Greek text, so that copies of the Septuagint translation used by the early Christians contained the divine name.

Interestingly, when the early Christians quoted from the Septuagint it is highly unlikely that they removed the name from the quotation. Thus, original manuscripts of the Christian Greek Scriptures (the "New Testament") more than likely contained God's name. Professor George Howard, in an article appearing in the Biblical Archaeology Review, March 1978, offered strong arguments for this conclusion. For example, he mentions "a famous rabbinic passage (Talmud Shabbat 13.5)" that "discusses the problem of destroying heretical texts (very probably including books of Jewish-Christians)." What was the problem? "The heretical texts contain the divine name, and their wholesale destruction would include the destruction of the divine name."

But what of Rosin's second objection? Would the use of God's name cause problems for Christendom? Well, consider what happened when the name was removed. After the first century, "Christian" copyists replaced God's name with words like "God" and "Lord" in both the Septuagint and the Christian Greek Scriptures. According to Professor Howard, this likely contributed to the turmoil that Christendom experienced in later years: "It may be that the removal of the Tetragrammaton [God's name in Hebrew] contributed significantly to the later Christological and Trinitarian debates which plagued the church of the early Christian centuries."

Certainly, the removal of God's name from the Bible made Christendom's adoption of the Trinity doctrine much easier. Hence, if Christendom were to restore the name in the complete Bible and in worship, it would cause difficulties. Jehovah, as he is revealed in the Hebrew and Christian Greek Scriptures, is clearly separate from Jesus Christ and is no part of a Trinity.

Professor Howard said in addition: "The removal of the Tetragrammaton probably created a different theological climate from that which existed during the New Testament period of the first century. The Jewish God who had always been carefully distinguished from all others by the use of his Hebrew name lost some of his distinctiveness with the passing of the Tetragrammaton." Jehovah's Witnesses have restored God's name not only in the complete Bible but also in their daily worship. Thus, they observe a 'careful distinction' between the true God and the false gods of this world. In this way they have been enabled to restore the "theological climate" that existed in the first-century Christian church.

Questions From Readers

■ Jesus said, "If you were blind, you would have no sin." (John 9:41) Did he mean that some humans are sinless?

No, all humans today are sinners, as were all in the first century, except Jesus himself. In these words from John 9:41, Jesus was referring to a particular sort of sin.

Our common ancestor Adam burdened all his descendants with sin. Adam had been created perfect, sinless. (Deuteronomy 32:4; 2 Samuel 22:31) When he disobeyed Jehovah's basic instructions, Adam became imperfect. To sin means basically "to miss the mark." Adam truly did that. So by violating God's command, Adam became a sinner.

All of us have been affected because all of us came from Adam. You could illustrate it this way: A man who was born with a dominant genetic defect would pass it on to all his offspring; they would inherit the same defect. Modern scientists can determine whether certain chromosomal defects exist in an embryo or a newborn, but Jehovah goes beyond that. He reveals that a grave defect did come to exist in Adam and that it has been passed on to all of us. This defect is sin. "Through one man [Adam] sin entered into the world and death through sin, and thus death spread to all men because they had all sinned." (Romans 5:12) This sinful state has put humans out of harmony with the Creator, in addition to bringing upon them sickness and death. No human besides Jesus has been perfect and free of condemnation to death.—Romans 5:18-21; 6:23; 2 Chronicles 6:36.

In the Bible, however, individuals are sometimes termed "sinners" because of being noted as outstanding practitioners of sin or of a flagrant sort of sin. (Luke 19:2-7; Mark 2:16, 17; 14:41) That, of course, does not mean that the rest of the people were perfect, sinless. Had they been, they would not have grown old and eventually died.

The account in John chapter 9 involved a man who was born blind but whose sight Jesus healed. The man had not personally been able to read the Scriptures, yet he did have a limited knowledge. He knew that God does not hear the requests of willful sinners. The fact that Jehovah empowered Jesus to perform the miracle of providing sight proved that Jesus was a prophet. The proud Pharisees, though, refused to accept this man's logical testimony, and they threw him out.—John 9:13-17, 26-34.

After this, Jesus said: "For this judgment I came into this world: that those not seeing might see and those seeing might become blind." (John 9:39) Yes, on the basis of his preaching, other activities, and role in God's purposes, individuals either would gain spiritual sight and walk in light or would be in spiritual darkness. (Isaiah 9:1, 2; 42:6, 7; Matthew 4:13-17; 6:23; 2 Peter 1:9; 2 Corinthians 4:4) Had the religious leaders been just uninformed Jews with the normal burden of human sin, their not accepting the Messiah might have been excused. But they, who claimed to "see," or understand, were especially reprehensible because they had greater knowledge of the Law and of God's prophetic Word. So their rejecting Jesus was a serious sin that condemned them more than their normal human imperfection and sin did. Thus, Jesus told the Pharisees: "If you were blind, you would have no sin. But now you say, 'We see.' Your sin remains."—John 9:41.

Annual Meeting October 1, 1988

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the members of Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania will be held on October 1, 1988, at the Assembly Hall of Jehovah's Witnesses, 2932 Kennedy Boulevard, Jersey City, New Jersey. A preliminary meeting of the members only will convene at 9:30 a.m., followed by the general annual meeting at 10:00 a.m.

The members of the Corporation should inform the Secretary's Office now of any change in their mailing addresses during the past year so that the regular letters of notice and proxies can reach them shortly after August 15.

The proxies, which will be sent to the members along with the notice of the annual meeting, are to be returned so as to reach the Office of the Secretary of the Society not later than September 1. Each member should complete and return his proxy promptly, stating whether he is going to be at the meeting personally or not. The information given on each proxy should be definite on this point, since it will be relied upon in determining who will be personally present.

It is expected that the entire session, including the formal business meeting and reports, will be concluded by 1:00 p.m. or shortly thereafter. There will be no afternoon session. Because of limited space, admission will be by ticket only. No arrangements will be made for tying in the annual meeting by telephone lines to other locations.

The Watchtower on Cassette A Wonderful Blessing

That is what ever so many people have been saying. A traveling insurance salesman in California observes: "I am on the highway traveling very often. I use the car cassette system to play the tapes and have been able to listen to The Watchtower, each issue, many times to gain a wealth of spiritual food."

Another letter, from California, explains: "Truly these tapes are a joy to me, and I know that they are a gift from the true God, Jehovah. I just love them and use every opportunity to listen. I feel that I am putting valuable information in my head instead of junk. Truly a mere 'thank you' does not fully express how having these tapes makes me feel."

A writer from Utah says: "While they cannot fully replace intense reading and re-reading of the articles, their aid in 'sounding' down the truth cannot be overlooked. Now my wife and I can listen quietly at home or while we are in the car."

Another reader from California adds: "I have found the tapes to be a wonderful way to keep up with the news and events of our world. They are also a great help in my studies of the Bible and its teachings."

One reader from Oregon writes: "I have found the tapes to be a great help in my studies of the Bible and its teachings. They are also a great help in my studies of the Bible and its teachings."
