THE PURPOSE OF "THE WATCHTOWER" is to exalt Jehovah God as the Sovereign of the universe. It keeps watch on world events as they fulfill Bible prophecy. It comforts all peoples with the good news that God's Kingdom will soon destroy those who oppress their fellowmen and that it will turn the earth into a paradise. It encourages faith in the now-reigning King, Jesus Christ, whose shed blood opens the way for mankind to gain eternal life. "The Watchtower," published by Jehovah's Witnesses continuously since 1879, is nonpolitical. It adheres to the Bible as its authority.

A Lasting Partnership?

THE Russian ruler Vladimir I decided one day that his pagan people should become "Christians." He himself had been converted in 987 C.E., after marrying a Greek Orthodox princess, and he now decreed mass baptism of his subjects—at sword point if necessary. Gradually the Russian Church gained independence from its "mother," the Greek Church, eventually even becoming a department of the State. And though the Soviet rulers today officially deny the existence of God, Church and State in Russia still maintain an uneasy partnership.

Centuries later, King Henry VIII of England also succeeded in forming a close partnership between Church and State, though by different methods. In 1532 he was worried because his wife, Catherine of Aragon, had failed to produce a male heir to the throne. To solve the problem, Henry secretly married his ladylove, Anne Boleyn. This was with the connivance of the Archbishop of Canterbury, who pronounced Henry's first marriage annulled. In 1534 this adulterer and tyrant declared himself the head of the Church of England, a title enjoyed by England's monarch to this very day. Church Synod decisions are subject to parliamentary approval, and bishops, as members of the House of Lords, take part in governing Britain. Church and State have thus been married in England for over 450 years.

Modern Church-State Marriages

In 1936 a revolt in Spain against the Republican government led to civil war and General Franco's rise to power. To the dismay of left-wingers, Franco gave the clergy considerable power in return for their exuberant support.

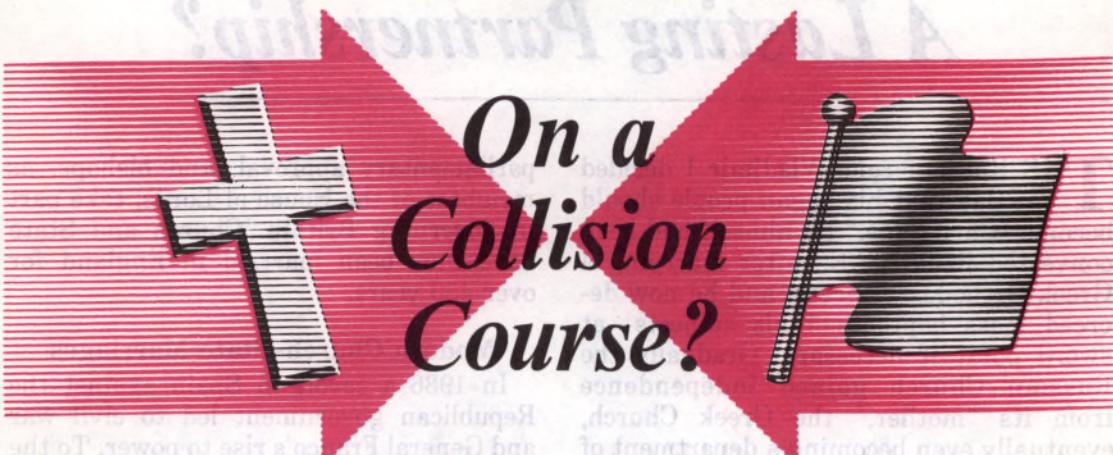

In 1983 the WCC (World Council of Churches) assembled in Vancouver, Canada. Its general secretary, Philip Potter, told them to "stay political." Grants of money from the WCC to militant political groups in a number of countries have been a source of grave concern to many churchgoers.

There is, therefore, little question that religion meddles in politics. The crucial question, though, is, Should it do so? Is it good or bad? Does religion's political involvement raise the moral standards of politics, or does it pervert religion? And what of the future? Will religion and politics continue to enjoy their 'love affair,' or will it sour and place them on a collision course?

Religion and Politics

THE policy of combining political and religious power in one man did not originate with Henry VIII. In his day it was already a well-tried political ploy designed to promote national unity.

For example, the ancient empire of Egypt had many gods. "Pharaoh himself was one of the gods, and a central figure in his subjects' lives," says The New Bible Dictionary. The Roman Empire likewise had a pantheon of gods, including the emperors. One historian describes emperor worship as "the most vital force in the religion of the Roman world."

But in spite of the fact that Church-State unions are centuries old, Christendom's modern-day excursions into politics have placed her on a collision course with the very ones whose favor she woos. Why so? To answer this question, let us now take a look at how Christendom became involved in politics in the first place.

True Christianity—A Contrast

Jesus Christ, the founder of Christianity, rejected all political power. On at least one occasion, the people, enthused by his miracles, tried forcibly to make him king, but he "withdrew again into the mountain all alone." (John 6:15) Asked by the Roman governor if he was a king, Jesus replied: "My kingdom is no part of this world. If my kingdom were part of this world, my attendants would have fought that I should not be delivered up to the Jews."—John 18:36.

Christ further told his disciples: "Because you are no part of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, on this account the world hates you." (John 15:19) So, early Christians did not become sidetracked by social or political problems. Slavery, for example, was then a major problem, but Christians did not campaign so as to abolish it. Instead, Christian slaves were commanded to be obedient to their masters.—Colossians 3:22.

Rather than dabbling in politics, these early Christians set about to accomplish the work of preaching "concerning the kingdom of God." (Acts 28:23) In just a few decades their message reached the limits of the then-known world. (Colossians 1:23) And with what effects? Thousands responded and became spiritual 'brothers and sisters.' (Matthew 23:8, 9) Jews and Gentiles who became Christians ceased their hostilities. Between the Jews and the Samaritans even major differences disappeared because of the "intense love" Christians had for one another.—1 Peter 4:8.

Christian love, however, extended even to their enemies. (Matthew 5:44) They therefore refused to join Caesar's armies. 'But,' some may object, 'did not Jesus say, "Pay back . . . Caesar's things to Caesar?"' True. However, was Jesus talking about military service? No, he was merely discussing the issue of whether to 'pay taxes to Caesar or not.' (Matthew 22:15-21) So Christians paid their taxes. But they viewed their lives as being dedicated to God and refused to do harm to their fellowman.

Becoming a Friend of the World

"But look at Christendom today," some may say. 'It is hopelessly divided, its members often slaughter one another, its clergy are embroiled in politics. What happened to Christianity?' Well, Jesus warned that false Christians would be 'sown' in among true Christians. (Matthew 13:24-30) Paul likewise prophesied: "I know that . . . oppressive wolves will enter in among you and . . . men will rise and speak twisted things to draw away the disciples after themselves."—Acts 20:29, 30.

Even in the first century this trend had begun. The disciple James found it necessary to write these graphic words: "You are as unfaithful as adulterous wives; don't you realize that making the world your friend is making God your enemy?" (James 4:4, The Jerusalem Bible; italics ours.) Many chose to disregard this divine counsel—so much so that in the fourth century a wolf in sheep's clothing, the Emperor Constantine, was able to compromise corrupt "Christianity" further by making it the official religion of the Roman Empire. But in becoming a 'friend of the world,' Christendom became God's enemy. An eventual collision became inevitable.

By the 13th century the Church, ruled by its "pope," or "father," had reached "the summit of its power," setting the stage for an even closer marriage of Church and State. Pope Innocent III became convinced that "the Lord gave Peter the rule not only of the Universal Church but also the rule of the whole world." (Italics ours.) Continues professor of history T. F. Tout in The Empire and the Papacy: "Innocent's work was that of an ecclesiastical statesman, . . . making and unmaking kings and emperors at his will." But adds the same writer: "The more political the papal authority became, the more difficult it was to uphold its prestige as the source of law, of morality, of religion."

Religion and War

War is politics on a more violent scale. Pope Innocent III, however, personally organized a military campaign against the Albigenses of southern France. This led to the ghastly massacre of thousands at Béziers in 1209 and the mass burning of victims by the Holy Inquisition. A crusade, originally intended for Palestine, was diverted by political intrigue to include Constantinople. There, "Christian" knights engaged in a "hideous three days of plunder, murder, lust, and sacrilege." On whom? On fellow "Christians"! Says one historian: "The very churches were ruthlessly pillaged."

The un-Christlike methods of the Church eventually led to Martin Luther's nailing of his challenging theses to the

In 1914, at a drum altar on the steps of St. Paul's, the Bishop of London stirred up patriotism in British troops castle church door at Wittenberg in 1517—and the Reformation was on. But, says H. A. L. Fisher, in History of Europe: "The new confession was . . . closely dependent upon princely and governmental favour." Germany became divided along politico-religious lines. In France, Calvinists likewise mixed with political leaders. The ensuing wars of religion were therefore fought not only for religious liberty but also because of "rivalry between Protestants and Roman Catholic nobles for control of the Crown." Thus, the history of religion in Europe is written in blood!

The 20th century dawned with Briton and Boer locked in combat in South Africa. Clergymen on both sides fanned the flames with "exhortations from the pulpit." Says historian R. Kruger: "The volume of supplication addressed heavenward by either side in the course of the war was only matched by its variety of denominational inspiration." White "Christians" slaughtered one another while asking God to help them do it!

This pattern was repeated on a colossal scale in 1914 when German troops marched into Belgium wearing belts inscribed with the words "Gott mit uns" (God with us). On both sides the Church was prolific in prayers for victory and vitriolic in abuse of the enemy.

Multitudes were disillusioned by religion's role in World War I. Calling religion "the opium of the people," atheists and communists multiplied. Nevertheless, the clergy continued their involvement in politics, supporting Fascist dictators such as Mussolini and Franco. In 1933 the Roman Catholic Church even concluded a concordat with the Nazis. Cardinal Faulhaber wrote to Hitler: "This handshake with the Papacy . . . is a feat of immeasurable blessing . . . May God preserve the Reich Chancellor [Hitler]."

Even the possibility of another world war has not swayed the clergy from politics. One recent trend has been for some churches to swerve toward a left-wing political stance. Says one writer: "The latest generation of theologians from Latin America . . . insists that Marxism is the unavoidable political expression of Christianity." But the Bible warns: "They sow the wind, they will reap the whirlwind." —Hosea 8:7, JB.

Reaping the Whirlwind

Yes, the Bible sounds a solemn warning: A terrible clash between religion and politics is coming. In Revelation chapter 17, the Bible depicts the world empire of false religion stained with blood as a "great harlot who sits on many waters." These "waters" represent 'peoples and nations.' (Verses 1, 15) The harlot is named "Babylon the Great, the mother of the harlots and of the disgusting things of the earth," and she is "drunk with the blood of the holy ones." (Verses 5, 6) "Babylon" is a fitting name for organized false religion, inasmuch as many of her doctrines stem from the ancient city of Babylon.* She has earned her murderous reputation by her persecution of true Christians throughout the centuries.

The world empire of false religion is further pictured as riding a beast with "seven heads and ten horns . . . [which] mean ten kings." (Verses 3, 12) Previous articles in this journal have identified this "beast" as the instrument entrusted with maintaining world peace, the United Nations. The churches have gone on record as supporting this organization. In October 1965, Pope Paul VI described the UN as "the last hope of concord and peace." In 1979, Pope John Paul II addressed the UN General Assembly. Without ever mentioning Christ or his Kingdom, he spoke of the UN as "the supreme forum of peace and justice."

* For details, see the book "Babylon the Great Has Fallen!" God's Kingdom Rules!, published by the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc.

But why is this union of religion and the UN so dangerous? Because "the ten horns . . . and the wild beast, these will hate the harlot and will make her devastated and naked . . . and will completely burn her with fire." (Verse 16) False religion is therefore headed straight for a catastrophic collision with politics. Being denuded and her rank uncleanness revealed, she will be destroyed utterly.

That will spark the "great tribulation" that Jesus spoke of, culminating in the battle of Armageddon. Christ, backed by invincible heavenly hosts, will "crush and put an end to" Satan's worldwide system, leaving only the 'meek that will inherit the earth.' These will be true Christians who have, among other things, steered clear of divisive politics.—Matthew 24:21; Daniel 2:44; Psalm 37:10, 11; Matthew 5:5; Revelation 6:2; 16:14-16.

If you are one who is distressed over the suffering and reproach that false religion has brought on God's name, what should you now do? The Bible commands: "Get out of her [false religion], my people, if you do not want to share with her in her sins." (Revelation 18:4) Only Jehovah's Witnesses are urging people to heed this command. They, like the early Christians, keep out of war and politics and hence will not be in line for destruction when religion collides with politics. So contact them. They will gladly show you how to find the "narrow gate" that leads not to destruction but to everlasting life.—Matthew 7:13, 14; John 17:3.

Jesus' Early Family Life

WHEN Jesus is growing up in Nazareth, it is a rather small, unimportant city. It is located in the hill country of an area called Galilee, not far from the beautiful Jezreel Valley.

When Jesus, perhaps about two years old, is brought here from Egypt with Joseph and Mary, he is evidently Mary's only child. But not for long. In time, James, Joseph, Simon, and Judas are born, and Mary and Joseph become parents to girls too. Eventually Jesus has, at the very least, six younger brothers and sisters.

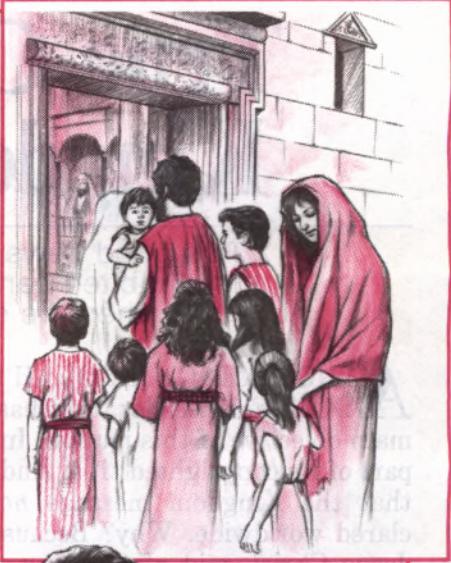

Jesus has other relatives too. We already know about his older cousin John, who lives many miles away in Judea. But living closer by in Galilee is Salome, who apparently is Mary's sister. Salome is married to Zebedee, so their two boys, James and John, would be Jesus' cousins. We do not know if, while growing up, Jesus spent much time with these boys, but later they became close companions, as we will see.

Joseph has to work very hard to support his growing family. He is a carpenter. Joseph raises Jesus as his own son, so Jesus is called 'the carpenter's son.' Joseph teaches Jesus to be a carpenter too, and he learns well. That is why people later say of Jesus, 'This is the carpenter.'

The life of Joseph's family is built around the worship of Jehovah God. In keeping with God's law, Joseph and Mary give their children spiritual instruction 'when they sit in their house, when they walk on the road, when they lie down, and when they get up.' There is a synagogue in Nazareth, and we can be sure that Joseph also regularly takes his family along to worship there. But no doubt they find their greatest enjoyment in regular trips to Jehovah's temple in Jerusalem, as we will consider in our next article. Matthew 13:55, 56; 27:56; Mark 15:40; 6:3; Deuteronomy 6:6-9.

True Christians Are Kingdom Preachers

ANNOUNCING JEHOVAH'S KINGDOM. For decades, that has been the main objective of this journal. In fact, it is part of its copyrighted title. And it is vital that the Kingdom message now be declared worldwide. Why? Because of what Jesus Christ said after citing other features comprising "the sign" of his invisible "presence" and the end of this system. Jesus said: "This Good News of the kingdom will be proclaimed to the whole world as a witness to all the nations. And then the end will come."—Matthew 24:3, 14, The Jerusalem Bible.

² Today, "the end" is near indeed. Hence, each dedicated witness of Jehovah might well ask: How do I feel about the Kingdom-preaching work? Am I participating in it regularly? And is my ministry being carried out with skill and zeal?

The Commission to Preach

the lampstand, and it shines upon all those in the house. Likewise let your light shine before men, that they may see your fine works and give glory to your Father who is in the heavens." (Matthew 5:14-16) That indicated that Jesus' disciples would be Kingdom preachers.

⁴ Concerning the foremost Kingdom preacher, it has been said: "As our Lord preached the kingdom He proceeded . . . to prepare and organize its Ministry . . . He began the prophetic ministry . . . and made both the Twelve and the Seventy partakers of the same. As He preached the coming kingdom and wrought 'signs,' He sent them before His face with a like message and like powers. By a wonderful course of minute teaching, . . . He trained them the meanwhile for positions of higher trust afterwards to be given."—A Church History, by Milo Mahan.

were the apostles and certain women "who were ministering to them from their belongings." (Luke 8:1-3) Yes, Jesus was a zealous proclaimer of the good news and took steps to initiate a Kingdom-preaching organization.

⁶ After a three-and-a-half-year ministry, Jesus finished his earthly course. But before he ascended to heaven, he gave his followers this commission: "Go . . . and make disciples of people of all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the holy spirit, teaching them to observe all the things I have commanded you. And, look! I am with you all the days until the conclusion of the system of things." (Matthew 28:19, 20) They would, indeed, be Kingdom preachers.

⁷ When Jesus was about to leave the earth, his disciples asked: "Lord, are you restoring the kingdom to Israel at this time?" In reply, he told them: "It does not belong to you to get knowledge of the times or seasons which the Father has placed in his own jurisdiction." Even though the disciples then lacked accurate knowledge about the Kingdom, Jesus could assign them to be its proclaimers, for they would have the needed help to carry out their commission. "But you will receive power when the holy spirit arrives upon you," Jesus added, "and you will be witnesses of me both in Jerusalem and in all Judea and Samaria and to the most distant part of the earth." (Acts 1:6-8) Under the guidance of the holy spirit, Jesus' followers eventually would realize that the Kingdom would be a heavenly government. (John 16:12, 13) And in time the facts about that Kingdom would be proclaimed "to the most distant part of the earth."

⁸ Those witnesses did their work very well. Of course, Jehovah was with them, and they had the support of the glorified Jesus Christ. (Acts 8:1-8; 11:19-21) No wonder that as early as 60 to 61 C.E. the apostle Paul could say that the "good news" had already been 'preached in all creation under heaven'!—Colossians 1:23.

T[estament] engages, but it is her basic, her essential activity. . . . Note well, Jesus did not say [at Acts 1:8], You shall witness to me, or, You shall bear witness to me, but, You shall be my witnesses. The use of the verb ‘to be’ here has a value which must be taken with full and literal seriousness. The expression [in Greek] does not merely state what the Church would do, but what the Church would be. . . . The Church of Jesus Christ is . . . a witnessing body.” (Pentecost and the Missionary Witness of the Church, by Harry R. Boer, pages 110-14) Yes, witnessing is the chief work of the true Christian congregation.

By Divine Providence

¹⁰ First-century Kingdom proclaimers received direction from a governing body. Traveling elders served within the organization, and congregational duties were shouldered by overseers and ministerial servants. (Acts 15:1, 2, 22-36; Philippians 1:1) But what happened when new circumstances developed?

¹¹ Well, consider what took place shortly after Pentecost of 33 C.E. Greek-speaking Jews began murmuring against Hebrew-speaking Jews “because their widows were being overlooked in the daily distribution.” To solve the problem, the apostles appointed “seven certified men” to care for this food distribution. (Acts 6:1-8) Concerning this we read: “At first, the care that the daily public meals were impartially distributed was all, so far as we are told, for which the ‘seven’ were set apart, but, of course, other duties would be added as they rose, for while the principles of the new faith were unchangeable, the machinery and modes of presentment, by which these might be most effectually established and extended, were left to the wisdom and practical experience of successive generations . . . Adaptation and modification of non-essential details . . . is imperative in any great organisation.” —Hours With the Bible, New Testament Series, volume II, by Cunningham Geikie.

¹² Prayerful reliance upon God, along with “the wisdom and practical experience” of the governing body, contributed to the progress of early Christianity. And things certainly were happening by divine providence. For instance, Jesus’ early followers were said to belong to “The Way.” (Acts 9:1, 2) But perhaps as early as 44 C.E. at Antioch, Syria, “the disciples were by divine providence called Christians.” (Acts 11:26) This was a God-given name that they readily accepted.—1 Peter 4:16.*

¹³ Among those early Christians, other developments also were within the divine providence. For instance, as Jehovah’s Witnesses now use modern publishing methods, so the early Christians pioneered the use of the codex—a real boon to their zealous Kingdom-preaching work. In this regard, C. C. McCown wrote: “The Christians’ religious books, both the Old Testament and the new writings . . . were not for the leisurely reading of the well-to-do. Hard-working business people wanted as much as they could get into a book. They and the earnest Christian missionaries wished to be able to refer to this or that proof text quickly, without having to un-

—The Biblical Archaeologist Reader, page 261.

¹⁴ Being "able to refer to this or that proof text quickly" was very important because of the Kingdom-preaching methods employed by the early Christians. At times, of course, they witnessed to people informally, as Jehovah's Witnesses often do today. Of this it has been said: "One of the peculiar features of the apostolic preaching was its incidental character. There was no waiting of an apostle for a great opportunity. His only state occasion was when, like Paul before Felix, he was led as a prisoner before a ruler in purple to give an account of himself and answer the charge of infraction of the laws. He was not without his opportunities, but they were furnished him in the prison, by the wayside, and in the humble home where he might be sheltered for the night. . . . He felt that his message was largely to human units, though equally ready to present it to the multitude. He was equally at home with any audience. He had not forgotten the example of Christ, . . . ship with him special instructions as to the best methods of preaching his doctrines, had reinforced these first lessons by others, and, just before his ascension, pointed them to the world as their field and every creature as their auditor."

—History of the Christian Church, by John F. Hurst, volume I, page 96.

"From House to House"

15. How were the apostles carrying out the preaching work in the days following Pentecost of 33 C.E.?

¹⁶ Later, the apostle Paul could remind appointed elders from Ephesus: "I did not hold back from telling you any of the things that were profitable nor from teaching you publicly and from house to house. But I thoroughly bore witness both to Jews and to Greeks about repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus." (Acts 20:20, 21) Paul did not mean that he was teaching appointed elders in their homes. Rather, he was witnessing to unbelieving Jews and Greeks about repentance toward Jehovah God and faith in Jesus Christ. Without question, Paul also taught those elders how to witness from house to house.

¹⁷ Concerning the apostle's ministry in Ephesus, it has been said: "Paul's general practice was to work at his trade from sunrise till 11 a.m. (Acts 20:34-35) at which hour Tyrannus had finished his teaching; then from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. to preach in the hall, hold conferences with helpers and private talks with candidates, plan extensions into the interior; then lastly to make a house-to-house evangelistic canvass that lasted from 4 p.m. till far into the night (Acts 20:20-21, 31)." (A. E. Bailey) Other scholars have stated: "He was not content merely to deliver discourses in the public assembly, and dispense with other instrumentalities, but zealously pursued his great work in private, from house to house, and literally carried home the truth of heaven to the hearths and hearts of the Ephesians." (A. A. Livermore) "Publicly and from house to house, in the city and throughout the province, he had preached the gospel." (E. M. Blaiklock) "It is worth noting that this greatest of preachers

¹⁸ House-to-house witnessing was done by Jesus' apostles in 33 C.E. It was part of Paul's ministry in Ephesus and undoubtedly elsewhere. So there is a solid Scriptural basis for the house-to-house ministry of Jehovah's Witnesses. And this is true of various other methods they use to spread the Kingdom message. Interestingly, McClintock and Strong's Cyclopedias states: "Our Lord and his apostles found places for preaching wherever people could be assembled. The mountain-side, the shores of seas and rivers, the public street, private houses, the porch of the Temple, the Jewish synagogue, and various other places were found available for the proclamation of the Gospel." (Volume VIII, page 483) Like Jesus and his early disciples, Jehovah's Witnesses preach the Kingdom message in "the public street, private houses, . . . and various other places." For instance, they engage in magazine street work (with this journal and its companion Awake!) and are especially known for their house-to-house witnessing.

¹⁹ The basic forms of the ministry now used by Jehovah's Witnesses were well established in the first century, and, besides this, it is proper for the present-day Governing Body of anointed Christians to decide what preaching methods are suitable at this time. Such decisions can partly be based on "the wisdom and practical experience" of these men. Especially, however, do they make decisions as did the first-century Christian governing body. God's direction and the guidance of his holy spirit are sought in prayer, and Scriptural precedents are followed when determining what preaching methods are most suitable in these "last days." —2 Timothy 3:1; Acts 15:23, 28.

²⁰ It is evident that the preaching methods used by Jehovah's Witnesses are within the divine providence, for God has crowned these efforts with abundant success and blessing. (Proverbs 10:22) Throngs are embracing true worship and joining the remnant of Jesus' anointed followers as part of the only organization that honors Jehovah's holy name and fearlessly declares the good news of the established heavenly Kingdom. May all of Jehovah's servants therefore continue exerting themselves in the disciple-making work as this system nears its end. This we must do faithfully, for true Christians unquestionably are Kingdom preachers.

20. (a) Why can we be sure that there is divine approval of the preaching methods used by Jehovah's Witnesses? (b) What attitude should all of Jehovah's servants have toward the Kingdom-preaching work?

Teach With Skill and Zeal

"Go therefore and make disciples of people of all the nations, . . . teaching them to observe all the things I have commanded you."—MATTHEW 28:19, 20.

JEHOVAH'S WORD encourages skill and industriousness. For instance, it states: "Have you beheld a man skillful in his work? Before kings is where he will station himself; he will not station himself before commonplace men." (Proverbs 22:29) Of course, there is nothing demeaning about working for "commonplace men." But the skillful artisan's fine work will not remain a secret. Why, news of his skill may reach the ears of a king, who may well seek his services!

² Knowledge and skill are needed in any profession. A man may study carpentry and may also learn much by observing those skilled in that trade. But to develop skill himself, he must put acquired knowledge to work on the job. A surgeon needs to be educated. But to become competent, he must put his knowledge to use in the operating room. And in that profession skill is vital, for competence can often make the difference between life and death for the patient. Yet, of far greater importance is proficiency as a minister. Why? Because the minister's effectiveness as a teacher can well affect the way that people respond to the good news. In turn, their response can make the difference between everlasting life and eternal death for them.

—Deuteronomy 30:19, 20; John 17:3.

³ The commission that Jesus Christ gave his followers involves teaching. He said: "Go therefore and make disciples of people of all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the holy spirit, teaching them to observe all the things I have commanded you. And, look! I am with you all the days until the conclusion of the system of things." (Matthew 28:19, 20) Of course, skill is required to teach the honest-hearted all the things Jesus commanded.

while he demonstrated by the Scriptures that Jesus was the Christ." (Acts 18:24-28) Clearly, Apollos taught with both skill and zeal.

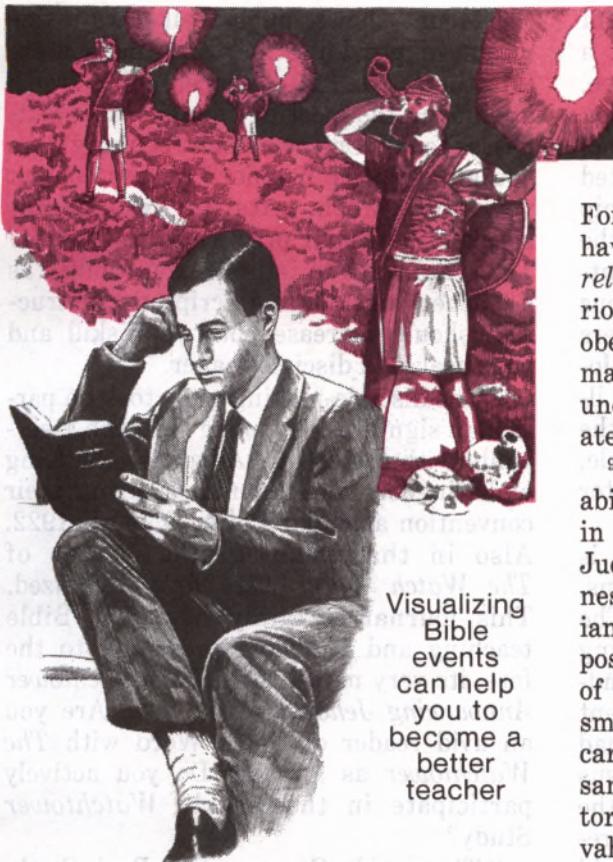

'Pay Attention to Your Teaching'

⁵ The apostle Paul told his Christian associate Timothy: "Pay constant attention to yourself and to your teaching. Stay by these things, for by doing this you will save both yourself and those who listen to you." (1 Timothy 4:16) Since the very salvation of both teacher and student is at stake, surely such instruction should be imparted skillfully and zealously.

⁶ Carpenters and surgeons surely must pay attention to themselves. They must be able to use their tools or instruments competently. So must the Christian minister, whose chief implement is 'the sword of the spirit, God's word.' (Ephesians 6:17) How can you become adept in handling the Scriptures? Through regular study and use, of course. So, have you read the Bible from cover to cover, taking time to meditate on its superb counsel? Do you read it daily? Are you using it regularly in the field ministry? And are you taking full advantage of the rich spiritual food being provided by Jehovah through "the faithful and discreet slave"?—Matthew 24:45-47.

⁷ Be sure to set aside time for study of God's Word and true Christian publications. This will fill your mind with wholesome information that will benefit you and that can be used to answer sincere inquirers. (1 Peter 3:15; Colossians 4:6) Times for study and meditation vary with families and with individuals. Some may find it beneficial to study at day's end. Others may be more alert upon arising. Still others may find a midday hour to be most suitable for them. In any case, regularity and diligence are of utmost importance. Joshua and kings of Israel were to read God's Word daily.—Joshua 1:7, 8; Deuteronomy 17:18-20.

Work to Become a Better Teacher

⁸ Improvement of teaching skill calls for hard work. One way to enhance your ability as a teacher is to use mental association when studying the Bible or Christian publications. Associate new ideas with those you already know. This will help you to outline information in your mind so that you can explain matters clearly when teaching others. Doubtless, you have used association when studying in the past.

8. How can the use of mental association improve your teaching skill?

For instance, at one time you may not have realized that Christians are to be in relative subjection to governmental "superior authorities." But you now know that obedience to God must come first. (Romans 13:1-8; Mark 12:17; Acts 5:29) You understand this because you have associated new points with those already known.

⁹ Another way to enhance your teaching ability is by visualizing incidents recorded in the Bible. Why not do this now with Judges 7:19-22? Under the cover of darkness, Gideon and 300 men surround a Midianite camp where sentries have just been posted. Suddenly, you hear Gideon's band of 100 blow their horns, and you see them smash the large water jars they have been carrying. The 200 other Israelites do the same thing. And as they all raise flaming torches aloft, you hear them shout: "Jehovah's sword and Gideon's!" As the terrorized Midianites begin to flee, Gideon's three companies continue blowing their horns, and you find that Jehovah has set the swords of the fleeing enemies against one another. Because you have visualized this event, doubtless you will remember it well and will be able to use it when teaching others. Surely, one lesson it teaches is that Jehovah can deliver his people without a powerful human military force.

—Psalm 94:14.

¹⁰ Fine illustrations, including those in the Scriptures, can also enhance your skill as a teacher. As an example, consider

9. Illustrate how you can visualize an incident recorded in the Bible.

10. In teaching, how might you use the illustration found at Judges 9:8-15?

Judges 9:8-15. Gideon's son Jotham told of a time when the trees went to anoint a ruler over them. Whereas the olive tree, the fig tree, and the vine refused a position of rulership, the lowly bramble eagerly accepted it. The valuable plants represented worthy persons who did not seek kingship over their fellow Israelites. However, the bramble, useful only as fuel, represented the kingship of arrogant, murderous Abimelech, who wanted to dominate others but met a bad end in fulfillment of Jotham's prophecy. (Judges 9:50-57) This illustration might be used to emphasize the need to do what is right and to be humble, not arrogant.—Psalm 18:26, 27; 1 Peter 5:5.

¹¹ The Great Teacher, Jesus Christ, is well known for his excellent illustrations. For example, consider his words: "The kingdom of the heavens is like a traveling merchant seeking fine pearls. Upon finding one pearl of high value, away he went and promptly sold all the things he had and bought it." (Matthew 13:45, 46) Jesus thus illustrated the preciousness of the Kingdom and showed that a person appreciating the true value of gaining it would be willing to part with anything in order to do so. There was nothing complicated about that illustration, and Christian teachers do well to keep that standard in mind when using illustrations as a teaching aid.

Meetings Can Make Us More Skillful

¹² Christian meetings play a significant role in making Jehovah's servants skillful and zealous teachers. As Jesus' Sermon on the Mount shows, public talks are a fine means of providing spiritual instruction. (Matthew 5:1-7:29) Hence, public talks are among the meetings of Jehovah's Witnesses today. Do you attend regularly? Are you an attentive listener? Do you consult your Bible when texts are read by the speaker? Is it your practice to take notes? These are ways to improve your ability as a teacher, and the fine Scriptural instruction should increase both your skill and your zeal as a disciple maker.

¹⁴ The weekly Congregation Book Study also provides opportunities to improve your ability as a teacher of the good news. When answering questions at these smaller gatherings, as well as at the Watchtower Study, do you express matters in your own words? Do your comments reflect what you believe in your heart?

¹⁵ Prior to 1922, Jehovah's servants customarily gathered for a midweek Prayer, Praise, and Testimony Meeting. It was an occasion for singing, giving testimonies, and engaging in prayer. But with the increased emphasis on house-to-house Kingdom proclamation, this gathering developed into the Service Meeting, which stresses the preaching work. Of particular help was the Bulletin, which contained field service instructions and "canvasses," or testimonies, that could be used in the ministry. Today, Our Kingdom Ministry provides similar assistance, as well as guidance for weekly "Meetings to Help Us Make Disciples." Do you regularly participate in such meetings? Are you applying the counsel designed to help you teach with skill and zeal?

¹⁶ To promote skillful teaching, the Theocratic Ministry School was instituted in the congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses in 1943. Regarding the school's chief purpose, its first guidebook stated: "This course is not provided to take away from your time spent in field service, but is arranged to make you more proficient therein. Stated in more specific terms, the purpose of this 'Course in Theocratic Ministry' is to prepare all 'faithful men', those who have heard God's Word and proved their faith therein, to 'be able to teach others' by going from door to door, by making back-calls [return visits], by conducting model studies and book studies, and, in short, by engaging in every phase of the Kingdom service. It is to the one end of making each one a more efficient Theocratic minister to the honor of the Lord's name; that he may be better equipped to publicly present the hope that is within him; that he may be 'apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing'. (2 Tim. 2:24, 25) Let no one lose sight of this primary purpose of the course." (Course in Theocratic Ministry, page 4) This remains the principal purpose of the Theocratic Ministry School. Have you been applying the fine information on teaching, reading, public speaking, and the like, that appears in this school's textbooks?^{*} Are you an enrollee? Do you gratefully accept and fulfill your assignments on the school program? This provision of Jehovah through his organization can help to make you a skillful and zealous minister.

Training for Zealous Teaching

¹⁸ But what if we are appointed as elders or are more experienced witnesses of Jehovah? Then love for others should move us to help new and less experienced Christians to become more skillful and zealous teachers. Surely this is proper, for Jesus sent out the 70 disciples only after giving them instructions for their ministry. (Luke 10:1-24) Paul taught the overseers of Ephesus "publicly and from house to house," and this would involve training them to witness to unbelievers while going from door to door in the field ministry. (Acts 20: 20, 21) Similarly, elders, pioneers, and others may gladly train fellow Witnesses in the field ministry today. Do you sense a need for such training? Then by all means seek it and accept it. Are you an elder? Then make arrangements for training others in the ministry while you yourself take a zealous lead in the field service.

Continue Developing Skill

study and application of acquired knowledge. The same is true of Christian ministers. Therefore, how vital it is that each dedicated witness of Jehovah work hard to increase his skill as a teacher of the good news! And since this is Jehovah's work, it should be the subject of our earnest prayers. If we seek God's help and guidance, we can be confident that he will bless our zealous ministry. As the apostle John said: "Whatever we ask we receive from [Jehovah God], because we are observing his commandments and are doing the things that are pleasing in his eyes."

—1 John 3:22.

²⁰ As the present wicked system of things nears its end, therefore, may we exert ourselves vigorously in the ministry. May we 'pay attention to ourselves and our teaching,' to our own salvation and to that of those who heed the Kingdom message. Yes, let us make every effort to teach with skill and zeal.

Kingdom Proclaimers Report

'They Adorn the Teaching of Our God'

THE simplicity and clarity of Kingdom truth can be 'adorned' by those who proclaim it to others. How? By their good conduct. Notice how the apostle Paul showed this. Christian slaves were counseled to exhibit "good fidelity to the full, so that they may adorn the teaching of our Savior, God, in all things." (Titus 2:10) The following experiences from Argentina demonstrate the practicalness of this counsel.

□ Six of Jehovah's Witnesses were employed in a supermarket where the owner was considered to be very strict. When they asked for time off to attend the Memorial of Christ's death, they were told, "Choose between your work and your meetings." Although work was scarce, they chose to attend the Memorial. The next day, they went to work thinking that they would be fired. What a surprise they had when not only were they kept on but four of them who were temporary workers were given permanent jobs. And all six received an increase in pay! Later, two of them decided to become regular pioneers, so the supermarket owner gave them a shift arrangement for their convenience. His reason for being so considerate of them? He did not want his honest, diligent workers to quit.

So the honesty and good work habits of these six Witnesses 'adorned' their teaching to Jehovah's honor.

□ A sister was working in a pharmacy, but because of the long hours, she was not attending all the Christian meetings, nor could she be a pioneer, which was her desire. The owner of the pharmacy would not give her the work schedule she wanted, so she left her job. She then worked as a maid, and this permitted her to auxiliary pioneer. A few months later, the pharmacy owner came to her house and offered her a job "with whatever working schedule she wanted." Why? "Because of her excellent conduct," says the report.

□ The good conduct of one Witness 'adorned' her teaching in a different way. The report from Argentina explains that when two Witnesses approached the door of a beautiful, luxurious house with a big, modern car outside, they felt a little afraid because of the evident show of wealth. How surprised they were to receive a cordial welcome. A two-hour discussion followed, answering questions. The Witnesses stated: "We agreed to return the following week. We left very happy but puzzled because we did not know the real reason for such a welcome. The following week we found out what that reason was."

The lady of the house explained: "I used to live in Mar del Plata and knew a young woman who led a very wild life. In time she began to study the Bible with Jehovah's Witnesses, and immediately a change in her personality became evident.

The neighbors and I could not believe the change in her because not a trace of her former wild personality was noticeable. She is now a respectable woman, the wife of an elder, as you call them, and now has a family that is an example to all."

The changed conduct of this young person when she became one of Jehovah's Witnesses now moved the lady to consider seriously the teachings of Jehovah's Witnesses. A Bible study was arranged then and there with this couple, and they began to attend the meetings at the Kingdom Hall. The Witnesses concluded this experience by stating: "This shows that our conduct can also give a witness, all to the glory and honor of Jehovah's name."

Missionary Service —Come What May!

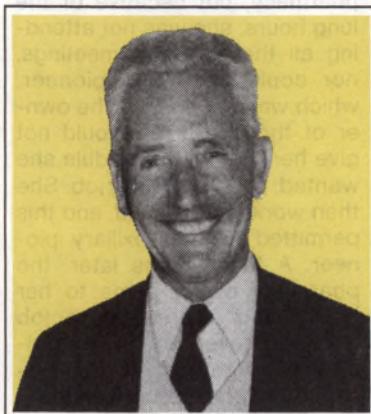

THE place: Coventry, England. The time: seven o'clock in the evening, November 14, 1940. Suddenly, air-raid sirens began to wail as a prelude to what was to be one of the longest raids in the history of modern warfare. When the bombs started falling, ten other pioneers (full-time preachers) and I huddled together under the stairway of our "pioneer home." My thoughts turned to my wife, who was away visiting her mother. Was she safe?

We poured out our hearts to Jehovah for protection. How happy we were to come through this ordeal unscathed and to learn later that my wife and all members of our little congregation were also safe! We felt as did the psalmist who declared, "Your own loving-kindness, O Jehovah, kept sustaining me."—Psalm 94:18.

Early Tragedy

From the time of my birth in January 1910, I was reared in a strict religious home, and that early Bible training helped me considerably in later years. This was especially true after my mother's death in January 1922, when I was just 12 years old.

About that time my father, although a Christadelphian, obtained from the Bible Students (as Jehovah's Witnesses were then known) a set of C. T. Russell's Studies in the Scriptures. One thing that impressed my father was the reasonable explanation of the ransom doctrine. (Matthew 20:28) Father felt strongly that if a Christian accepts the ransom doctrine, he is responsible to tell others about it. He realized, too, that the Bible Students were doing just that, so he sought them out.

In the early 1920's he began attending meetings of the Bible Students in Coventry and took me along with him. Soon we both began to share in the preaching work. Dad reached the point of consecration (now called dedication), and in 1924 he was baptized. In 1926, at the age of 16, I, too, was baptized. The following year, in October 1927, tragedy struck again—my father died, leaving me and my younger sister to be cared for. She went to live with our grandparents, whereas I continued to live alone.

I was just 17, and I had to identify Father's body and make the necessary arrangements for his burial. To me this was a formidable task, but the Christian brothers came to my aid. They invited me to their homes for meals, studied the Bible with me, and accompanied me in the preaching work until I felt stronger again. How I appreciated their kindness during this difficult period!

Although living in Coventry, I found employment in the nearby city of Birmingham. During the week, I was able to attend meetings there. It was at these midweek meetings that I later met Christina, who was to become my wife.

Although raised a Methodist, Chris visited other churches, searching for something more satisfying. One Sunday morning two Bible Students visited her home and left three booklets with her. Shortly thereafter, Chris' mother attended a meeting of the Bible Students and acquired three books for Chris. Little did her mother realize how these books were to influence her daughter's life, even to the point of Chris' going from house to house with the Kingdom message—something Chris had said she would never do!

War Declared

In 1934 Chris and I were married. We both entered married life with the purpose of 'seeking first God's Kingdom,' and we can truthfully say that Jehovah has blessed us for pursuing this course. (Matthew 6:33) As our goal, we kept in mind entering the full-time pioneer ministry. So we made arrangements for others to share our home and to work as pioneers along with us. But by this time, 1939, war clouds were looming up, and it seemed as though everyone in Coventry was making arrangements for a long period of austerity and for protection against possible bombings.

World War II was a very difficult period for everyone but especially for our brothers. For nearly six years, Coventry, as an industrial centre, was the special target of the German bombers. This meant many sleepless nights. We took turns staying up one night a week to protect our "pioneer home" and also the homes of our neighbours, while they in turn protected our home on other nights. There were some pretty close calls too. Why, on one occasion Chris was visiting a home to share a Bible message when a raid started. Bombs fell, and the houses on both sides of the home she was visiting were completely destroyed.

In and Out of Prison

Adding to our discomfort was the harassment by the authorities because of our neutrality. As a result, Chris and I were imprisoned for a short term. As soon as I had served my sentence, I was charged again, and I ended up going back to prison. This we called cat and mouse, since a cat will often release a mouse only to pounce on it again.

Even though we had little contact with the prison officers, at times we were able to preach to some of them. I recall one officer, named Beveridge, who during my first sentence ridiculed our neutral stand. When I was imprisoned the second time, his attitude had improved some. During my third sentence, he was quite favourable, although opportunities to talk with him were limited. When I finally left prison, I lost contact with him.

Years later, when we were in Portugal, a letter came from the Society's office in Brooklyn advising us that Eric Beveridge, a graduate of Gilead (the Watchtower school for training missionaries) was being assigned to Portugal. How happy we were to learn that his father had been that favourable prison officer! He later retired from prison service and became a baptized Witness.

Missionary Service and Unusual Challenges

With the end of the war in 1945, the Kingdom work in England, as in other parts of the earth, entered a period of prosperity and expansion. Brother Knorr, then the president of the Watch Tower

In Brazil, we had to learn how to "knock" at a door—by clapping our hands loudly at the front gate

Society, and Brother Henschel visited England and held a special meeting with all pioneers interested in attending the Watchtower Bible School of Gilead, which had been opened in February 1943. Christina and I attended the meeting, filled out our preliminary applications, and wondered if we would ever be called.

In 1946 the Society invited me to do circuit work in England, visiting a number of congregations. I enjoyed this privilege for three years, and then, when least expected, the final applications for missionary school arrived! These we filled out immediately, and shortly thereafter we were invited to attend the 15th class, beginning in February 1950. The next five months in Gilead School in upper New York State were an unforgettable experience of intensive Bible study and mature Christian association. Before we realized it, we were attending graduation at Yankee Stadium on July 30, 1950. Our assignment? Brazil.

A missionary home was opened in the coffee-exporting port of Santos, Brazil, and we were part of a group of eight missionaries assigned to start our work there. There was the initial period of adapting to new customs and the Portuguese language. For a child, learning a new language may be relatively simple. But for us, at 40 years of age, it was far from easy. On one occasion I went with another missionary to buy bread. The Portuguese word for bread (pão) sounds similar to the word for stick (pau), the former having a slight nasal sound. Not yet having mastered the nasal sound, we asked for sticks (paus), and the astonished baker said that he did not have any!

Another custom that it took a while to get used to was how to accept hospitality when a householder offered it. We would say: "Muito obrigado" (Thank you very much), expecting to receive some refreshments. This, however, to the householder meant no! Finally, we learned the right expression: "Aceito" (I accept), which brought pleasure to the householder—and to us.

We found that we even had to learn how to "knock" at a door. You see, the Brazilian custom is to clap the hands loudly at the front gate. At first it was always a surprise for us to have the householder answer our "knock," but we soon got used to it.

Unhappily, within six months of our arrival in Brazil, I contracted an intestinal disorder with amoebas. The prolonged treatment for the illness left me very weak, and finally, in March 1954, acting upon the doctor's advice, we sadly returned to England. There, in the temperate climate, I gradually recovered, but during my recuperation we received an unexpected letter.

A Very Different Missionary Assignment

The Society invited us to go to Portugal! There the work had been banned, and the two previous branch overseers had been expelled from the country. I was able to gain entrance into Portugal as a business representative of an English firm, and we arrived there in November 1954.

Having worked in Brazil where our preaching work was carried on openly, we soon realized that here in Portugal we would have to exercise care and much tact. Since our work was banned, we could not openly identify ourselves as Jehovah's Witnesses. Door-to-door preaching was a challenge since we never knew whom we would meet. If anyone seemed overly curious or antagonistic, we simply left the territory, to return another day. It was not easy to get invited into the homes since people were understandably suspicious of strangers. However, Chris did start a study with a lady who later told her that she really had been afraid to let anyone into her home. Why did she do so?

It seems that this lady had been praying to God to show her the right way. But Chris' knock came so soon after her prayer that she felt wary about letting her in! A Bible study was started, and the lady and her teenage daughter both progressed to dedication and baptism. They are still firm in the truth.

At that time Chris and I were the only missionaries in Portugal, but gradually the Society was able to have more sent into the country. The work progressed rapidly, especially in the capital, Lisbon. This increase aroused opposition. Several brothers were imprisoned, and much literature was confiscated.

Finally, for us the worst blow came in 1962 when we, along with four other missionaries, were ordered to leave the country. We requested an interview with the chief of the secret police to ask for a reconsideration of our case, since we were merely teaching people the Bible. His reply: "You have abused Portuguese hospitality for seven years and will never set foot in Portugal again!" We were shattered.

We have always tried to 'seek first God's Kingdom' in our lives, with resultant blessings

It is extremely difficult to describe our feelings at having to leave after seven happy years in that missionary field. Actually, leaving Portugal was much harder for us than leaving England back in 1950 to go to Gilead. We had worked intimately with the brothers; we had shared their joys and their problems. We felt we were leaving when our help and support were most needed. But we had no choice. 'Our missionary days are over,' we sadly thought as we set sail for England.

From England to the Amazon!

In England we continued in the full-time ministry as special pioneers, but we felt incomplete. We always remembered the happy times in missionary service, and we wanted to get back to it—so much so that we finally wrote to the Society about the possibility of another assignment, even though by now I was over 50 years of age and Chris was 49. How great our joy when we received an invitation to return to Brazil and work from a missionary home in Belém, a city at the mouth of the Amazon River!

We did appreciate the Society's letter giving us an idea of the climate in Belém—"hot and humid," it said—and giving us the option of turning down the assignment. However, we were overjoyed at the prospect of returning to Brazil, even though it was to a different part of the country. We gladly accepted, and early in 1964 we arrived in our new assignment.

After serving one year in Belém, I was invited to do circuit work, visiting congregations in that region. This was a real challenge. The circuit was some 800 miles* long and 300 miles wide, taking in both sides of the Amazon River. The heat? Well, we just had to get accustomed to it! Conditions were often primitive. Even dirt highways were few in those days. Clouds of dust arose from them in the dry season. With the rainy season, they became impassable.

Besides trusting in Jehovah for his protection, having a good sense of humor helped. On one visit with an isolated Witness family, we had to sleep in a stable. In the morning Chris awoke to find herself covered with blood. We called out to the brother, thinking that something serious had happened. Imagine our surprise when he calmly informed us that she had apparently been bitten by a vampire bat! One reference work explains that among bats in the Amazon region are 'bloodsucking vampires (Dysopes)', although these are by no means as dangerous as travelers' tales would lead one to believe.' Had we known that before, we would have been less fearful of the outcome!

After serving a year in that circuit, we were transferred to Rio de Janeiro and later to São Paulo, where we have been serving now for several years. The Brazilian people are very open and friendly, and it has been a joy to experience the love and hospitality of the brothers in this part of the country as well. At the same time, we have enjoyed many fine experiences in the field.

At one house a youngster came in answer to Chris' handclapping. He said that his mother could not come to the door because she was crying. Sensing something wrong, Chris said, "Tell her that senhora Christina would like to speak to her." The mother came to the door, asking, "Do you know anything about the Bible?"

"That is just why I am here!" Chris answered. She invited Chris inside. On the table was a large Bible, open where the lady had been reading, seeking comfort. She was very upset because her husband had been away for a week, after a quarrel between them.

"He's a good husband and father," she said, "and I'm sure he hasn't gone away with someone else." Chris shared some Bible principles on family life and started a Bible study in the book The Truth That Leads to Eternal Life. That very night the lady went to the Kingdom Hall. Since we had to leave that week for the next congregation, the study was turned over to a local publisher. How happy we were when we visited the congregation again six months later and met not only the lady but her husband and three children! Some time later, both husband and wife were baptized as Jehovah's Witnesses.

Now, though both of us are over 70 years of age, we are still able, by Jehovah's loving-kindness, to continue serving in our missionary assignment, although not travelling as much as in the past. It has been a marvelous privilege to meet and work with so many mature missionaries and local brothers and sisters. We are glad that from the very beginning we have tried to 'seek first God's Kingdom' in our lives. For over 30 years missionary service has been our joy. We are ever mindful of the words of the psalmist, when he said: "For Jehovah is good; his loving-kindness is to time indefinite." (Psalm 100:5) And how we have appreciated that!

“Walk Worthily . . . With Long-Suffering”

HE was repeatedly arrested and subjected to intense interrogation. Once she was even paraded through the streets in front of a jeering crowd in company with nine male prisoners whose crimes varied from murder to rape and theft. Altogether she was imprisoned and separated from her family for more than 20 years.

This Christian woman's experience is perhaps not unique, for many have similarly endured long prison terms. But her "crime" was certainly unusual: She was one of Jehovah's Witnesses. Renouncing her faith could have brought immediate relief. What therefore enabled this woman not only to submit to such treatment but also to retain a measure of happiness?

To answer this question, let us make reference to another faithful Christian who was also arrested because of the religious stand that he took. This was the apostle Paul. Writing to the congregation at Ephesus, he said: "I, therefore, the prisoner in the Lord, entreat you to walk worthily of the calling with which you were called, with complete lowliness of mind and mildness, with long-suffering [longness of spirit], putting up with one another in love, earnestly endeavoring to observe the oneness of the spirit in the uniting bond of peace." —Ephesians 4:1-3.

Christians in Ephesus had a marvelous "calling" to heavenly life with Christ Jesus. (1 Peter 1:3, 4) But in order to attain to it, they had to "walk," or conduct themselves, in a way that proved they were worthy of it. Paul indicated that "long-suffering" was vital to their doing this. "Long-suffering," however, meant more than merely suffering pain or inconvenience for a prolonged period of time. A man with a broken leg 'suffers long,' but does he have any other choice? The long-suffering person, however, endures ill-treatment without retaliation or irritation for a purpose. His slowness to express anger is an exercise of deliberate restraint.

Paul showed such restraint in enduring house arrest. He knew it served "for the advancement of the good news." (Philippians 1:12) Also, it allowed Paul to demonstrate his loyalty and devotion to Jehovah God, to prove he was 'walking worthily' of his calling to heavenly life. Paul thus happily endured imprisonment. And many Christians since then have similarly demonstrated long-suffering. Not all have had the heavenly "calling." But they have been moved to "walk worthily" of the prize of everlasting life, whether that be in the heavens or in the earthly realm of the Kingdom.

Nevertheless, comparatively few have had to suffer the rigors of prison life. Is long-suffering valuable under other circumstances? Yes, indeed, for Paul encouraged the entire Ephesian congregation to "walk worthily . . . with long-suffering." Ephesus was the most important city in the Roman province of Asia. Its wealth was a potential snare for Christians. It was also a city noted for loose conduct, demonism, sorcery, and magic, a city filled with worshipers of the goddess Artemis, or Diana. Said ancient historian Lucius Seneca concerning such ones: "Men seek pleasure from every source. No vice remains within its limits . . . We are overwhelmed with forgetfulness of that which is honourable." 'Walking worthily' was therefore a trying experience for Christians there.

No wonder, then, that Paul further wrote the Ephesians: "This, therefore, I say and bear witness to in the Lord, that you no longer go on walking just as the nations also walk in the unprofitableness of their minds, while they are in darkness mentally, and alienated from the life that belongs to God." (Ephesians 4:17, 18) How difficult it must have been to live among such depraved people! But by being long-suffering, a Christian could at least lead a tolerable life.

Needed Today

We today similarly find ourselves surrounded by wickedness, materialism, and demonic influence. In fact, there is even greater pressure on Christians today because Satan has been cast down to the vicinity of the earth and is set on destroying our faith. (Revelation 12:12, 17) We must therefore pay more than the usual attention to how we walk if we are to prove worthy. And like Christians of old, we must be long-suffering. True, it is unusual for a person to show such restraint. Nevertheless, long-suffering is an evidence of God's spirit upon a Christian. "The fruitage of the spirit is . . . long-suffering," says Galatians 5:22. How, though, does it benefit us?

Long-suffering helps us tolerate economic difficulties, health problems, and other pressures of 20th-century living. We know why such problems exist and we also know that relief is in sight! (2 Timothy 3:1-5; Luke 21:28) Even when we encounter strong opposition to the work of spreading the good news of the Kingdom, long-suffering acts like a restraining wall that not only helps us endure but also keeps our hope alive.

Following Paul's advice to "be long-suffering with joy" has also helped improve touchy domestic situations. (Colossians 1:11) At times Christians are yoked in marriage to unbelievers. Said one man: "Not only was our family life very much disturbed but I also had to endure all kinds of hardships . . . No meals were prepared . . . No clothing was cleaned and ready . . . Sometimes it was filthy language on her part toward me." But this Christian man was long-suffering. "I turned each time to Jehovah in prayer," he said, "and I trusted Him to help me develop the good quality of long-suffering in order not to lose my Christian balance . . . This has helped me to endure." The outcome? After 20 years of opposition, his wife became a Christian too! "How grateful I am to Jehovah," says this man, "that he helped me cultivate the fruit of the spirit, long-suffering."

Long-Suffering Toward One Another

Since long-suffering is a product of God's holy spirit, it is incompatible with "the works of the flesh," such as enmities, strife, jealousy, fits of anger, contentions, and envies. (Galatians 5:19-21) What results when we allow these "works" to surface and dominate in our dealings with one another?

A situation involving Moses illustrates what can happen. He was said to be "by far the meekest of all the men who were upon the surface of the ground." (Numbers 12:3) On one occasion, however, he ceased being long-suffering. When the nation's water supply ran out, the faithless people cried out: "Why have you men brought Jehovah's congregation into this wilderness for us and our beasts of burden to die there?" (Numbers 20:4) This situation required on Moses' part both restraint and sober reflection on the fact that their rebellious talk was really directed against Jehovah himself! Moses, however, allowed fleshly impulses to dominate him. Said the psalmist: "Further, they caused provocation at the waters of Meribah, so that it went badly with Moses by reason of them. For they embittered his spirit and he began to speak rashly with his lips."—Psalm 106:32, 33.

As if he were the miraculous provider of water, Moses bitterly said: "Hear, now, you rebels! Is it from this crag that we shall bring out water for you?" (Numbers 20:10) Yes, Moses allowed the quarrelsome and complaining spirit of others to get the better of him. And because of his loss of restraint and also his failing to glorify Jehovah, he was denied entry into the Promised Land.

Christians today must beware of falling into this snare. At times our own Christian brothers can be a source of provocation, as the Israelites were to Moses. "But a slave of the Lord does not need to fight, but needs to be gentle toward all, qualified to teach, keeping himself restrained under evil." (2 Timothy 2:24) The exhortation at 1 Thessalonians 5:14 is thus appropriate: "Be long-suffering toward all."

Worthy Examples to Imitate

Christ set a perfect example of long-suffering. He had to endure not only "contrary talk by sinners" but also problems that arose among his own disciples. (Hebrews 12:3) At times they were slow either to comprehend or to apply his teachings. Yet, never did he deal harshly with them. When on the night of his betrayal his disciples fell asleep, Christ kindly exhorted them by saying: "Why are you sleeping? Rise and carry on prayer, that you do not enter into temptation."—Luke 22:46.

Since his resurrection, Jesus has continued to manifest patience and long-suffering. Saul, for example, was a persecutor of Christians, a blasphemer, and an insolent man. Yet Christ showed him mercy in a way that led to Saul's becoming a prominent follower of Christ. Paul (formerly Saul) explains: "The reason why I was shown mercy was that by means of me as the foremost case Christ Jesus might demonstrate all his long-suffering for a sample of those who are going to rest their faith on him for everlasting life."—1 Timothy 1:15, 16.

The Scriptures tell us to "follow his [Christ's] steps closely." (1 Peter 2:21) Do you show the same patience toward fellow believers when they are slow to apply some Bible principle? Do you grant a similar long-suffering spirit toward people of the world who are ignorant of the truth? Are you moved to help such ones find the truth?

The incomparable example of long-suffering, however, is Jehovah. "Jehovah is merciful and gracious, slow to anger and abundant in loving-kindness." (Psalm 103:8; Exodus 34:5-7) Though men such as Moses became frustrated with the stubborn Israelites, Jehovah said: "All day long I have spread out my hands toward a people that is disobedient and talks back." (Romans 10:21) But there was purpose behind such long-suffering. Like a father with a wayward son, Jehovah refused to give up hope for improvement in his strained relationship with Israel. And his forbearance produced results—a remnant of that nation was saved!

Limits to Long-Suffering

God's patience is not limitless, however. Israel's persistent resistance to Jehovah's warnings resulted in their being alienated from God as a nation. Said Isaiah: "But they themselves rebelled and made his holy spirit feel hurt. He now was changed into an enemy of theirs; he himself warred against them." (Isaiah 63:10) Yes, in time "the rage of Jehovah came up against his people." (2 Chronicles 36:15, 16) His long-suffering came to its end.

This has serious implications for us today. It would be unreasonable to conclude that God will forever tolerate wrongdoing. True, as Paul says: "God, although having the will to demonstrate his wrath and to make his power known, tolerated with much long-suffering vessels of wrath made fit for destruction." Yet there has been a purpose in such toleration: to "make known the riches of his glory." (Romans 9:22, 23) Yes, as a result of God's restraint, his name has been declared throughout the earth. Also, God has announced his "day of vengeance" by means of his people. (Isaiah 61:2) It is true that many mock and ridicule this warning message, like the Epicureans and Stoics in Paul's day who said, "What is it this chatteringer would like to tell?" (Acts 17:18) But remember, God will bring "vengeance upon those who do not know God and those who do not obey the good news about our Lord Jesus."—2 Thessalonians 1:8.

In the meantime, however, we must continue with the work of preaching God's judgments until God reveals that it is time to stop. We must 'exercise patience until the presence of the Lord.' (James 5:7) But patiently enduring the various evils that life in this system brings upon us will produce tangible results. It will increase our dependence upon Jehovah. It will smooth out our relationships with others and prevent needless problems from developing. Long-suffering may mean hardship, but regardless of who we are or where we may be living, whether free or imprisoned, experiencing opposition either at home or in the Christian ministry, the peace and unity that long-suffering promotes will add joy and contentment to our lives. (Ephesians 4:2) By all means, then, walk worthily with long-suffering.

Annual Meeting October 5, 1985

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the members of the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania on October 5, 1985, will be held at the Assembly Hall of Jehovah's Witnesses, 973 Flatbush Avenue in the Borough of Brooklyn, New York City. A preliminary meeting of the members only will be held at 9:30 a.m., followed by the general annual meeting at 10:00 a.m., Saturday, October 5, 1985.

It will be appreciated if the members of the Corporation will inform the Secretary's Office of any change in their mailing addresses during the past year so that the regular letters of notice and proxies can reach them shortly after August 15.

The proxies, which will be sent to the members along with the notice of the annual meeting, are to be returned so as to reach the Office of the Secretary of the Society not later than September 1. As each member knows, he should complete and return his proxy promptly, stating whether he is going to be at the meeting personally or not. The information given on each proxy should be definite on this point, as it will be relied upon in determining in advance those who will actually be personally present.

It is expected that the entire session, including the formal business meeting and reports, will be concluded by 1:00 p.m. or shortly thereafter. There will be no afternoon session. Due to limited space, admission will be by ticket only. No arrangements will be made for tying in the annual meeting by telephone lines to other locations.

Questions From Readers

- How does the holy spirit work along with the modern-day Governing Body in the appointment of elders?

The apostle Paul told Christian elders from Ephesus: "Pay attention to yourselves and to all the flock, among which the holy spirit has appointed you overseers, to shepherd the congregation of God, which he purchased with the blood of his own Son."—Acts 20:28.

Paul did not explain in detail how God's spirit functioned in such appointments. However, we can gain insight from what occurred when the first-century governing body considered a question concerning circumcision. In summarizing their conclusion, they wrote: "For the holy spirit and we ourselves have favored adding no further burden to you, except these necessary things." (Acts 15:28) How did God's spirit, his impersonal active force, contribute to the binding decision reached at that time?

Acts chapter 15 shows that first Paul and Barnabas outlined the question. Then a discussion took place. The apostle Peter related what had led up to baptism of the uncircumcised Gentile Cornelius and his household. Peter explained that 'God bore witness by giving them the holy spirit, just as he did to us also.' (Acts 15:7, 8; 10:9-48) Next Paul and Barnabas 'related the many signs and portents that God did through them among the nations.' (Acts 15:12) Thus, by its operation on Peter, Cornelius, Paul, and Barnabas, the holy spirit indicated that Gentiles did not need to be circumcised.

Yet there were additional operations of the spirit involved in that decision reached by the governing body. We can assume that they had asked for the help of the spirit on their deliberations. Such help may have moved the disciple James to recall the prophecy at Amos 9:11, 12, and to see its application. That prophecy had, of course, been written under the inspiration of the holy spirit. (Acts 15:13-20) Furthermore, "the apostles and older men in Jerusalem" who made up the governing body were Christians who were anointed with holy spirit and who manifested its operation in their lives, such as by producing its fruits.—Acts 15:2; Romans 8:14-17; 1 Corinthians 7:40; Galatians 5:22, 23.

So without there being some audible directive from heaven on the circumcision question, those of the governing body could accurately say that "the holy spirit" had led to their decision.

It is similar with the appointment of Christian men to be elders, or overseers, in the congregations today. Periodically a group of elders (likely including a traveling overseer of the Society) meet to consider recommending brothers for appointment as overseers. Those in the group have themselves been appointed as elders and they manifest in their lives that they have the spirit. Their discussion is opened with prayer for the spirit's guidance. Then, during the meeting, they analyze whether each brother being considered measures up to the qualifications for elders set out in the Bible, which have been recorded under the direction of holy spirit. (1 Timothy 3:2-7; Titus 1:5-9) They also consider whether the brother evidences in his manner of life that he is "full of spirit and wisdom." (Acts 6:3) If they agree that he is of that sort and meets the qualifications to a reasonable degree, their recommendation is forwarded to the spirit-designated Governing Body or its chosen representatives. Later the congregation may be informed that the brother has been appointed.

Understandably, the appointed elder is still imperfect and may have limitations. But the apostles were imperfect, both before Jesus chose them and later when they served on the governing body. (Luke 9:46, 54; 22:54-62; Galatians 2:11-14) They certainly did, though, have God's spirit and were appointed under its guidance. Comparably, brothers and sisters can be confident that 'the holy spirit has appointed the overseers, to shepherd the congregation.' (Acts 20:28) It is regarding such men that the counsel is given: "Remember those who are taking the lead among you, who have spoken the word of God to you, and as you contemplate how their conduct turns out imitate their faith."—Hebrews 13:7.

A Remedy for Bad Nerves

With all the problems people have these days, it is little wonder that there is so much stress-related illness. A grandmother from Canada describes her situation and how she receives relief.

"I am raising an 11-year-old grandson and recently got a 14-year-old granddaughter to try to help. I have bad nerves, but I just wanted to let you know that when I get to feeling down not only do I pray to Jehovah but I have found something else that is really helpful.

"I drop what I am doing and lie or sit down with the Kingdom Melodies tapes on. I close my eyes and push other thoughts out of my mind by recalling what I can of the words as the music plays. When I get up, I feel much better and am once again able to carry on."
